Sign of the Times

In Bloom

Budding Talent

Eudora Welty may be known for her fiction, but it's her green thumb that has Jane Roy Brown springing with excitement. In One Writer's Garden, which she signs at Porter Square Books on March 27, Roy Brown takes the reader on a tour through one of Welty's biggest inspirations—her Mississippi backyard, where bright magenta flowers (a faux pas at the time) reminded her to be a little rebellious.

A.R.T. OF THE MATTER

Putting the A-R-T in Party

The American Repertory Theater has successfully wrestled Valentine's Day away from those saps at Hallmark, and, for the second year in a row, they put on one hell of a show at the Park Plaza Castle.

The A.R.T. Ever After gala had a fairy tale theme, and during the cocktail hour, guests got to rub elbows with the likes of Little Red Riding Hood and a hot guy dressed as either Peter Pan or Robin Hood. (Who cares? He filled out his tunic nicely.)

It was an everyone who's anyone kind of evening, with a guest list that included honoree and angel of Cambridge Joan Parker, WGBH-TV Channel 2 wit Jared Bowen, the ever affable Alex Pierpont, the wickedly handsome Kevin Cole Costin, sexy brunette Rachael Goldfarb with her man, Mark Slovenkai, and her mother, Fern Portnoy, and so on and so forth.

After being invited to find their tables amid an enchanted forest, guests were served a romantic dinner and plied with wine, after which Broadway giant Stephen Schwartz serenaded the crowd with hits from his plays, which include Godspell, Pippin and Wicked.

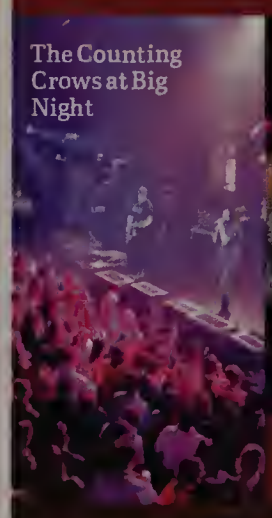
As one show-tune lover put it: "This is a total Broadway-gasm."

However, the funniest quote of the night was courtesy of the A.R.T.'s grand old man, Jeremy Geidt, who told a story about the great English conductor Sir Thomas Beecham: "He thought this one female cellist was playing badly, so he said, 'Madam, you have between your legs an instrument capable of giving pleasure to thousands, and all you can do is scratch it!'"

Consider It Rocked

One of the most outrageously over-the-top parties in Boston is Big Night, a benefit for the Big Brothers Association, which switched things up a bit this year but otherwise upheld its reputation as the most fun you've had since arriving at your freshman dorm.

Rock the Casbah took place at House of Blues, and as always, the food was amazing, with offerings from Angela and Seth Raynor of ACK's most popular hangout, the Pearl, and the crew from Island Creek Oysters, among others, accompanied by headlining entertainment from the Counting Crows and Raphael Saadiq. In short, it was a car-service kind of night.



Joan Parker and Diane Paulus at A.R.T. Ever After

Julie Owens and Stephen Schwartz at A.R.T. Ever After

The Counting Crows at Big Night

Christine Meara, Mary Kakas and Billy Meara at Big Night

George and Leigh Denny at A Celebration of Choices

Present and accounted for: the ever-affable Tim Dibble, freaks of nature Billy and Christine Meara, the improbably perfect Liz and Peter Georgantas, Concord party pair J.K. and Virginia Nicholas, the eternally sparkly Courtney and Michael Forrester, granddaddy of good times Patrick Lyons and the ethereal Kristina, New England's only rock star/charter boat captain Jennifer Clarke and her TV-star husband, Lenny, Newton homey's Peter Monaco and Nancy Fabian Pallotta, and so on and so forth.

The Foundation Room lent itself nicely to the party's Moroccan theme, the bands both nailed it, and the next morning, at least several guests were scratching their heads, wondering, "Did I really do that last night?"

Out of the Mouths of Babes

You gotta hand it to Planned Parenthood—PR-wise, they've got impeccable timing. A Celebration of Choices, held at the Mandarin Oriental, happened less than a week after the Susan G. Komen uproar, which naturally was the topic of much palaver.

Over cocktails, guests compared the most moving, witty or idiotic thing they read on Facebook etc., and the happy ending to the whole episode gave the evening an extra jolt of energy.

On hand and looking like a million bucks were such bigwigs as staunch supporters Jojo and Jeff Longnecker, brunette babe Kate Sayare and her stunning mother, Susan Whitehead, the right honourable Judge Nonnie Burnes with her other half, Rick, Pill Hill denizens Coco and Kyra Montague, the entire Owens clan, and the evening's honorees, first couple of Massachusetts Diane and Deval Patrick.

It was the former's speech that had the crowd in tears and earned them both a standing O, but even better—the whole evening was kept short and sweet, and everyone was home in time to watch an episode of their favorite TV show.

Best line of the night: a volunteer describing a 13-year-old boy she was counseling, who said, "People live to be 100 these days, so I can wait to have sex. I'll still get to do it for, like, 80 years." ×××

The IMPROPER

Nostalgie de la Boue

Sentimentality, like everything else in the universe except this blanket statement, is subjective. Myself, I can't walk by a pile of steaming ordure without feeling wistful about the summer I spent interning at a consulting company. But to many Bostonians, Fenway Park is the epicenter of sentiment, a bloated green monster of nostalgia. The hard seats, the squawking hawkers, the smell of sweat-basted humanity—these seem to make anyone born north of Stamford, Conn., dissolve in a slush of dopamines. People speak of the stadium's history as if it were the Great Ballcourt of Chichen Itza. ("Man, remember that time the Mayans ceremoniously decapitated their Toltec captives after throwing the votive ball through the elaborate masonry goal hoop? Doesn't get better than that.") There are pants-over-the-head congenital idiots who, at the sniff of a batting average, turn pedant, spooling off arcana as if they're channeling Harold Bloom. Admittedly, I understand less about baseball than I do about thoracic surgery, but I get the appeal. The world has slid into irony and muddle, so there's comfort in the bone-dry statistic, the seventh-inning stretch, the conviction that Carl Crawford's wrist is a subject of towering relevance. It sure beats worrying.

A Tall Order

STAR PLAYER

'THE PRESSURE of playing Larry Bird never got to me," says Tug Coker. "I'm terrible for a pro, but I play basketball pretty well for an actor." The 34-year-old Celtics fan and Harvard MFA grad will don the Legend's short shorts and wispy 'stache for Magic/Bird, a Broadway play exploring the relationship between hall of famers Bird and Magic Johnson, opening on April 11. Coker's audition went so well the casting director gave him a hug. But it'll be harder to impress the taciturn Bird, who'll make the production the first play he's ever attended. "He's a tough nut to crack," says Coker. "I told him I wanted to be authentic as possible, and I told him I was going to kick the Lakers' ass onstage." NICK ALTSCHULLER

Good Eats

Labor of Love

Adam Gendreau and Patrick Gilmartin don't call themselves sausage wizards for nothing. The chefs at Staff Meal food truck give their Taiwanese lap cheong links a delectably salty-sweetness thanks to a hit of char siu sauce (aka Chinese barbecue sauce). As in a traditional preparation, sausage coins are paired with fluffy fried rice, but here, the combo serves as the most popular taco filling on the menu. Also inside the double-walled corn tortilla: fermented-black-bean mayo, scallion greens and a fistful of fried garlic, shallots and tempura crumbs. It's the perfect snack for crunch time. ELIZABETH BOMZE

TEXT AND THE CITY

Think about all the times you call a business to pose a question like, "Can I get a haircut at 1:45 pm?" "What's the dress code?" "Does your bar admit mimes?" There's a Seaport District startup with a plan to turn those queries into texts through an app called Pingdup. Soon, you could not-talk to clubs, salons and Jiffy Lube the same way you don't talk to your closest friends—via text. Pingdup was founded by Mark Slater, a British BU alum and one of the cofounders of fashion e-tailer Karmaloop. Right now it has about 30 Southie businesses signed on, but there are plans to expand through Greater Boston. "Everyone's had the experience where you call to make an appointment, and you hear, 'Can you please hold?'" Slater says. "We're replacing that annoying phone conversation." Pingdup is aiming for a full rollout by mid-April, but you can sign up now at pingdup.com. EZRA DYER

FAINTING SPELLS

THIS IS YOUR "MEDICAL EMERGENCY" TALKING: Yep, I was the girl who fainted between Central and Harvard on the Red Line on March 7. Who hasn't prayed for the sweet release of unconsciousness on the T during rush hour? Thank you to my concerned fellow commuters and the friendly MBTA staffers. But mostly, I want to thank the very handsome Southern gentleman who knelt down and asked me questions to rule out permanent brain damage. There are a few questions I'd like to ask you myself... mainly, if you're single and want to get a drink. I swear I won't pass out. redlinefainter@gmail.com

To the dude eating Cheerios and milk on the T: It's a social norm not to eat food on public transit (it might even be a regulation), but people look the other way for drinks or non-offensive treats. With the cereal, I kept having to look out of the corner of my eye to see if the sloshing milk was going to splash me. You also started drinking the milk from the bowl, which is not only out of bounds in public, but bad form even in the privacy of your kitchen. With little effort, a man can finish a bowl of Honey Nuts in under a minute at home. Try it next time. Morning jeers

You know who you are: You think you're something else with your short hair, faux Frenchness, giant painting of yourself hanging in your office and a cushy job you've secured in your late 20s. Things look swell for this hipster. The problem is that you're extremely aware of this, and talk down to people and treat them like they're stupid. Your project manager clique is a form of workplace bullying. By the time you're in your 40s, I hope karma catches up with you.

First Taste

KICK ASS

The loss of Gargoyles on the Square was a major blow to the Somerville dining scene, but word that the team behind Posto's pizza mecca would launch a Mexican spot in the beloved Davis Square location reassured diners they'd remain in good hands. "There's actually a lot of similarities between Mexican and Italian regional cooking," says chef/owner Joe Cassinelli. "It's about using what's available to you, and the flavor profiles are similar. They're both about family food." After months of renovations that have rendered the space unrecognizable, he opened the Painted Burro in late March.

"We needed to open it up," he says. "The wall that ran between the dining room and the bar made it too formal for what I wanted to do." That wall has been reduced to a partition, making the space feel twice the size of what it was. The bar is now flipped against the windows, using the energy from Elm Street as the perfect backdrop for sipping margaritas or snacking on bites like spicy pickled watermelon radish, grapes and cucumbers ($5) or crispy chicharonnes ($8).

The restaurant showcases works by local artist Raul Gonzalez, including a fanciful mural of a donkey that flanks the bar. In the dining room, handpainted Day of the Dead skulls stare down on diners as they dig into chilled shrimp and octopus salad ($14), achiote-citrus marinated chicken ($19) or the mammoth chupacabra taco ($16).

Although he originally planned to feature strictly Oaxacan-inspired dishes, Cassinelli decided not to limit the menu to a specific region. "This is our spin on authentic dishes, and to use the local products that I love, I had to expand." He's certainly having fun with the liberties experimentation allows. While the opening menu doesn't sport much in the way of desserts, he'll soon add a series of popsicles and ice creams, including one that uses the flavors of Mexican corn. It's an unexpected twist. Or perhaps not. Says Cassinelli, "A chef-driven Mexican restaurant might not be familiar to everyone, but I think I know the clientele here." KYLE WRIGHT

Q&A

THE NEXT CHAPTER

Fashion designer, author and former reality-TV star Lauren Conrad will sign copies of her latest novel, The Fame Game at Barnes & Noble Prudential Center on April 5.

Why did you go in a darker direction for the new series of novels?
I think there's a way to do it where you can show a darker side to Hollywood, because there's a very, very dark side. The whole lifestyle has been glamorized so much and reality TV and social media have made it easier to achieve. I wanted to show the less attractive side of the business.

Do your characters parallel you?
I can still tell certain experiences that I've had, but the characters' attitude toward them is a little bit different.

What's the secret to not becoming a Hollywood trainwreck?
Watching other people go down certain paths, it's so important to be surrounded by good friends who aren't "yes men."

What's the status of the* L.A. Candy *movie that was in the works?
I've been so busy writing two books over the last five months! I just finished Lauren Conrad Beauty, and that had to be finished much earlier than The Fame Game because of the way it's printed and laid out. Between that and the clothing lines, my plate was a little full.

What's exciting in fashion this spring?
The color palette. It's just so pretty. Whenever the shows start to go darker and darker, I feel I'm going against the trend because I dress like it's spring every season. But living in California makes it easier. Those beautiful sherbet colors and pastels.

Do you watch reality TV?
I don't watch a ton of TV, period, but the only reality TV I watch is like Discovery Channel. When you work on reality TV for so long, it ruins it for you. You know every trick. You're more concerned with trying to catch continuity errors than the story line.

Drink of the Moment

GRASS ROOTS

NAME: The Nay Sayer. PRICE: $13.

INGREDIENTS: Bully Boy White Whiskey, lemon, honey syrup, ginseng bitters, ginger beer, muddled cucumber and freshly squeezed wheatgrass with a cucumber garnish.

ASSURANCES TO WOULD-BE FIRST-DATERS: Expert muddling and juicing techniques mean you won't get wheatgrass or cucumber bits stuck in your teeth.

NOW YOU SEE IT: Limited fresh ingredients occasionally leave the green-hued bev in short supply. Each pre-service prep meeting includes a "yea or nay to Nay" update, so servers can alert guests about availability.

TO THE HATERS: Patrick Sandlin, unofficial beer czar at Saloon and Foundry on Elm, created and named the cocktail as a challenge to whiskey-phobes.

AGE BEFORE BEAUTY: Saloon's most popular cocktail to date has been the Ward 44, a modern adaptation of the Ward 8 featuring house-made pork-belly rye.

HOME RUN: Though the Nay Sayer might not be the most favored drink on the menu, Saloon's Dennis Cargill calls it a "cult classic." Customers bring friends specifically to try it, and seeing one usually sparks imitation orders from around the room.

SAY IT AIN'T SO: To mix this properly at home, you'd need a juicer that's pricier than an iPad.

IN RELATION TO THE GOOP CLEANSE: The Nay Sayer is $412 cheaper than Gwyneth Paltrow's detox program. But relying on either beverage for daily nutrients will cause users to pass out in the shower.

AWE SHUCKS

Gould wins gold.

UNI SASHIMI BAR'S Chris Gould has a new accolade to hang on the wall of his renovated restaurant. The Maine native took top honors at the Shucks Maine Lobster World Series on March 11 during the International Boston Seafood Show after facing off against visiting chefs Pascal Sauton, David Quintana and David MacLennan. Gould's inventive preparation of miso-butter–basted lobster over maitake mushroom ragout, sunchoke puree and lily bulbs edged out the competition, whose offerings included lobster pot pie, lobster salad and lobster rolls. He walked away with a striped buoy, $5,000 and a chance to do it again at the finals in Maine after a victor is claimed from the European bracket in April. Give 'em shell, chef!

HUSBAND-AND-WIFE TEAM Robert Krajewski and Lynette Mosher are splitting up—in the kitchen. After collective stints at Clio, the Blue Room and, most recently, Lily Bistro in Rockland, Maine, the pair is headed back to the Hub. Mosher has been named chef at Michael Schlow's soon-to-launch Happy's, and Krajewski is now executive chef at Aquitaine in the South End.

MOVE OVER, MR. BARTLEY? Tasty Burger's hotly anticipated second location won't open in Davis Square, as was first rumored, but it's still heading over the Charles. Expect a late-summer opening on JFK Street in Harvard Square. Hard liquor hopefuls will have to settle for beer and wine, meaning the promise of spiked shakes will have to be shelved for a little while longer.

BARBARA LYNCH IS GETTING into the prepared-food biz with BLinc, her startup in Southie. The Menton chef is keeping an eye on nutrition and will focus on dehydrating products instead of freezing or canning. Expect a line of soups to be available online and in specialty stores soon.

PowerShot G1X

High-End, Advanced Digital Camera

The Pinnacle of PowerShot.

Bright, fast and more creative than ever: advanced technologies come together for an exciting new camera that moves beyond anything the G-Series has seen before. The PowerShot G1 X digital camera will inspire advanced amateurs who have embraced the G-Series to explore new realms of photographic expression, and give pros an excellent camera that complements their creative demands. The new 1.5-inch High-Sensitivity CMOS sensor approaches an EOS DSLR's APS-C sized sensor, with a light-sensitive area that's approximately 6.3 times larger than that of the PowerShot G12 digital camera. The new 14.3 Megapixel sensor, combined with a new lens and DIGIC 5 Image Processor, creates the HS SYSTEM that delivers image quality previously impossible in a compact camera, with beautiful blur, lower noise, and extraordinary resolution in low-light shooting and can shoot at ISOs of up to 12800. The PowerShot G1 X also has 14-bit RAW capabilities for even greater creative control and Full HD Video recording. Manual settings and operability inherited from EOS cameras impart a high-level shooting experience, and open the door to new creative possibilities. Substantive luxury defines the design: a neatly clarified sculpture with a firm grip, huge Vari-angle LCD and optical viewfinder.

CUTTING COSTS

WHAT'S THE ANTIDOTE TO RESTAURANT week, that grueling spell of deeply discounted gorging in dining rooms all over town? It'd seem to be Salon Week—a spell of deeply discounted beautification. The Week's premiere (it runs April 1–7) will see Bostonians hopping between top hair hotspots, relaxing over conditioning treatments, chatting over cuts and refreshing their color—all at 50 percent off.

The brainchild of power hair duo Maria Lekkakos (a former Miss Massachusetts and owner of M. Lekkakos Salon Spa Boutique in Wenham) and Marc Harris (owner of three eponymous salons in Back Bay, the Financial District and in the Sports Club/LA), Salon Week will simultaneously take place in a host of other cities including Atlanta, Dallas, Los Angeles, New York and Miami. And they've pulled in some heavyweight partners, too, with the likes of Goldwell, Oribe and Wella.

Back in Boston, the names are just as impressive: Bradley & Diegel, Studio 9 and Salon Eva Michelle are just a few of the local participants. For more information, visit salonweek.com.

ON A ROLL

In his heyday, Red Sox legend Luis Tiant could deliver a knuckleball like nobody's business. These days the "Fred Astaire of baseball" is still smoking hot, albeit in another game. With the help of master blender Jose "Pepin" Garcia, Tiant, along with his son Daniel, brings Bostonians two full-bodied cigars, El Tiante Habano Rosado and El Tiante Habano Oscuro. These cabinet-style, Nicaraguan-rolled smokes boast hints of roasted nuts, wood, spice and bittersweet chocolate. They're stogies with elegance, and with the power of a knockout pitch.

A FINE LINE

Sometimes, inspiration for a new clothing line comes from the runways. Sometimes it comes from the streets. And sometimes, it comes directly from your own sales floor.

"About a year and a half ago, we saw people coming into our store, looking at the higher-end labels, and saying, 'I'm just not going to spend that kind of money anymore," says Steve Simon, owner of National Jean Company. "So I started thinking it'd be great if I had a nicely designed line that I could sell for less."

His answer? A trip to New York to meet with the designers and manufacturers who now stitch up his two in-house lines, Mercer and Tobey Grey. Both are reminiscent of this-season numbers by designer heavyweights—à la the one-shouldered dresses that suggest Marc Jacobs, or the blazers in high-voltage hues that call to mind Rag & Bone.

Moreover, they're mixed in with national brands that Simon peddles (Paige denim, Elizabeth and James, J. Brand, among many others). Even in such company, they're flying out the door. "We just sold 150 cropped blazers in 10 days," says Simon. That's because of the extremely reasonable price—silk dresses at $120—and also because they're flattering for a range of ages.

The line's proven popular with more than just clients, too. "I've had requests from other retailers to carry them," he says. But so far, Simon's holding back, watching what sells on the floor, and letting the design process work its magic.

"I constantly ask my sales teams' input on what they like and see selling well," says Simon. "Because we're made in New York, I can create something I see a need for within six weeks. So the line evolves almost right away. These are clothes that come straight from what I see people are needing, and they come back right away to meet those needs."

FREE BIRD

A novel about an orphan finding her identity

IINSPIRED BY THE SPIRIT OF Brontë's Jane Eyre, Livesey gives us Gemma Hardy. This Icelandic orphan has a surname well-suited to her fortitude. After her father drowns, she's taken to Scotland by an aunt raging with Dickensian awfulness before leaving to become a scholarship student and a virtual servant.

Not until she goes to work as an au pair and teacher to a young girl named Nell does she encounter humane treatment, as well as curiosity and oblique flirtation from Nell's uncle, Mr. Sinclair. He talks wittily to her in the third person: "How deftly she fails to answer my question. You should be a barrister." He's mysterious, fascinating and fascinated, and, in spite of their differences in age and status, he eventually proposes. But her discovery of his ambiguously dark secrets causes her to flee for a new position. There, she's wooed by another interesting oddball, but she leaves him, too. Bird-loving Gemma is like a bird herself, beautiful in spirit and self-protectively independent.

She embarks for Iceland where she scouts out her late mother's roots and has adopted-child epiphanies, which solidify her identity. Livesey's style swoops and soars like Gemma herself. ✖✖✖

FROM PAGE 166: "As if my thoughts had summoned him, my uncle appeared—not, of course, on the windswept grass but in my brain. He had faced the same problem of an intractable child when he came to Iceland. I pictured him, whether from my memories or his stories I couldn't say, rolling coloured balls over the rough ground.... And he had talked, telling stories in a language that I didn't understand but in which the underlying message was clear: this man wished me well."

NEWLY MINTED

Though most pastels tread the fine line between sweetly subtle and "Easter Bunny chic," creamy mint is a breath of fresh air and this season's "it" color. Dreamy and retro, it takes on a modern sophistication when paired with gold, cobalt or coral.

The Escape Artist { BY ANDREW RIMAS }

IN CHARM'S WAY

VILLA VIEW Frederick Law Olmsted designed Wheatleigh's grounds.

A GIFT, EXCEPTING A Greek horse or a witch's apple, is supposed to please. When railroad magnate Henry H. Cook's daughter got married, back in 1893, daddy took the principle to a Gilded Age extreme. Scorning the flatware and gift card route, Cook gave her Wheatleigh, an Italian palazzo set about 80 longitudinal degrees west of where it should've been, overlooking the unruffled waters of the Berkshire's Stockbridge Bowl instead of Lake Como. Couples would be well advised to put a palazzo at the top of their registry. As visitors to the Gardner Museum know, they make life markedly more gracious.

Now operating as the sort of five-star hotel that gives other five-star hotels reason to stare at the ground and scuff their feet, Wheatleigh is a two-and-a-half-hour drive from Boston. But to replicate the sense of transport, you'd need a transatlantic flight and a winding trip up the Bergamo Alps. To be there is to abandon not only the city, but the drag and sap of the humdrum. Pulling up past a screen of pines into the circular, hedge-rimmed driveway, the first thing you see is a grand marble fountain, spangled with scallops and bulbous fish. The second thing you notice is the smiling staff whisking away your bags and car keys. But before stepping inside for a glass of Champagne, take a moment to appreciate the hotel's facade: a subdued confection of brick and limestone with a handsome symmetry of pillars, and a set of sapphire Tiffany windows glimmering from the second floor.

Inside the Great Hall, a rococo fireplace lords over custom-built sofas and antique carpeting. The eye, however, is drawn to the Palladian windows overlooking the grounds in back. Originally designed by Frederick Law Olmsted, known for the Emerald Necklance and Central Park, the landscaping is more wooded than it was a hundred years ago, when the view of the water was untrammeled by anything that couldn't be mowed. Nowadays, on a snowy afternoon with the hearth crackling and the trees in their winter cladding, the aesthetics are so storybook you wouldn't be surprised to see a family of bears in nightshirts.

Guest rooms match the muted stateliness of the Great Hall—color schemes are variations on white, slate and taupe, with dark woods and dabs of leather. Bathrooms feature deep soaking tubs and walk-in showers, and, on check-in, a butler offers a choice between high-end bath products (Bulgari, Clarins, etc.). But even the Bose sound system feels less like an extravagance than a thoughtful touch. And if you get bored of admiring the sightlines, spa treatments can be ordered in-room, while a modern fitness center sits in the basement opposite the wine cellar—tastings are at 5:30 pm on weekends.

Wheatleigh's philosophy on service is that of the silver teapot: polished to a dazzle, yet warm. In the Great Hall and Library, someone is always discreetly poised to refill a glass or deliver an amuse bouche. They'll even suggest services you may not have known you wanted: warm popcorn and a dish of melted butter with your bedtime movie, or an extra bottle of water placed in your cup holder if you take a drive. It's a level of service that even the most opulent city hotels might find hard to replicate, largely because, with only 19 rooms on the property, there's never a crowd.

But the reason many guests make the trek here is the kitchen. Chef Jeffrey Thompson established Wheatleigh as one of the top culinary destinations in the region and, in truth, most Boston chefs would take one bite of his spiny lobster with citrus, fennel and caviar and clench their wooden spoons in envy. This is food as creative and artfully built as the most lapidary dishes at L'Espalier, and delivered with the same flourish—your server will don a white glove to shave your Perigord truffle. Highlights on the menu include sturgeon with gnocchi, salsify and delicata squash, and kanpachi with beets, heart of palm and cress, while the cheese trolley—local, cow-oriented—is expertly curated. Matched with the eclectic treats from the cellar, and you have a meal that's less a simple pleasure than a milestone.

Wheatleigh is an anomaly in Massachusetts—a country house with dining and service worthy of your more reputable European chateaux. Considering its proximity to the Mass Pike, a visit there is a gift well worth giving yourself. ×××

THREE'S COMPANY The tabla de dips, served with vegetable chips, is a playful plate for sharing.

WALKING INTO CASA B is like entering a technicolor movie. Down the narrow stairs from the spare upper level is a world where vibrant colors saturate surfaces, and the young and cosmopolitan chat in a breezy, clipped manner over artful plates and cocktails. You can tell the restaurant is a labor of love for its owners, chef Alberto Cabré, who helms the open kitchen, and his wife, Angelina Jockovich, who manages the front of house. They're eager to chat with diners, regaling them with stories about their former lives as architects and caterers, and about the origins of their multicultural food and restaurant's name. ("B" is for Bonobis, the last name of Cabré's maternal grandfather and culinary inspiration.)

Befitting the upscale dinner-party environment, the menu of Spanish-inflected Latin-American creations is separated into tablas, tapas and pinchos (though all fall under the umbrella of bar snacks). The Puerto Rican Cabré and Colombian Jockovich find a commonality in their respective cultures' emphasis on seafood, root vegetables, plantains and herbs, so it's no surprise that some of the best dishes make use of these ingredients. The tabla de ceviches ($18) experiments with the citrus-seafood formula of traditional ceviche with three combinations: hake in lime juice, salmon in lemon and lobster in orange. Tossed with cilantro and accompanied by vegetable chips, the ceviches arrive on a wooden plank and are a study in subtle differences elicited by texture, acidity and sweetness. Equally delicious, and a good value, is the tabla de dips ($14), comprising three spreads: a parmesan-mayo artichoke, a goat cheese laced with bits of roasted pepper, and a fava-bean-and-ricotta puree adorned with mushrooms. All three are creamy and heavenly over vegetable chips (which are also distributed with asparagus dip to every table). It's food to graze on over drinks, but with the inclusion of root vegetables and starches in practically every dish, you'll find yourself prematurely full if you're not careful.

Seafood lovers should save room for the coctel de camarones costeño ($10), which bears as much resemblance to shrimp cocktail as a banh mi does to a meatball sub. Casa B's version tosses cooked shrimp with a remoulade sauce flecked with cilantro and serves them in hollowed buttery potatoes atop a balsamic glaze. The atún salteado ($12) brings four plantain discs mounded with seared tuna and microgreens over a wasabi aioli. Both dishes distill maximum flavor into each bite, without any one element overwhelming the others.

B.N's Picks

Coctel de camarones costeño

Corazones de pollo

Surtido de cremas

Apt for a restaurant with lush terrariums mounted on the walls, the kitchen shows considerable skill with land-dwelling proteins. Of the pinchos, the corazones de pollo ($9) and the sandwich de bistec ($9) provide tender meats in sweet gravy over thick slices of bread. Dressed in a sauce made from Licor 43, the chicken hearts have a sweet vanilla taste, while sautéed onions and crispy shallots enhance the steak's savory flavor.

In the unlikely event that you're still hungry, order one of the sizable desserts. Most notable is the budín de coco y chocolate ($9), a gut-busting slab of coconut-and-chocolate bread pudding drizzled with guava sauce. Dense and decadent, it's impossible to finish alone. The surtido de cremas ($10) provides another option with three crème brûlées—orange, Taza chocolate and coffee, and banana—to linger over.

The best place to dine at Casa B might be a perch at the four-stool bar. There, craft-cocktail enthusiast Taso Papapsoris pours drinks that rival Back Bar around the corner. If available, sample the house-distilled coffee and orange liqueur, a perfect complement to any chocolate dessert and a stellar finish to a stunning, cinematic meal. ×××

The Ellie Fund's annual "Oscar Night Gala" took place on Feb. 26 at Mandarin Oriental, Boston. Sanctioned by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, the event brought Hollywood style to the city with a red carpet, chef stations, live and silent auctions and the Academy Awards telecast. The 350 guests raised more than $200,000 for local breast cancer patients and their families.

Local supporters of St. Jude Children's Research Hospital celebrated its 50th anniversary at "TomorrowNite," a benefit at Taj Boston on March 3. The 110 guests enjoyed a four-course dinner with wine pairings, an auction and a talk by the hospital's Dr. Douglas R. Green. The event raised more than $260,000.

ASK CHERYL

Q: MY UPPER EYELIDS ARE DROOPING AND MAKING ME LOOK OLDER AND TIRED. WHAT CAN I DO ABOUT IT?

A: HOW TO FIX SAGGING UPPER EYELIDS is one of the most the common questions we get at SkinHealth Centers from both men and women. There are many factors that can contribute to having droopy lids, but usually they are hereditary.

The best way to correct droopy eyelids is through surgery. The technical term for cosmetic eyelid surgery is blepharoplasty. The goal is to look natural and to look like yourself, but more alert and refreshed.

This one-hour surgical procedure is performed under local anesthesia, there is minimal discomfort, and the recovery time is 7 to 10 days. During this time you will feel fine and can drive, shop, and maintain normal activities. However, you will initially want to wear dark glasses outside of the house because there will be some swelling, and possibly bruising, around the eyes for a few days.

The procedure for "bags" under the eyes is the same, and many people opt to have their upper and lower lids done at the same time. Once again, the end result is that you look more rested, and the procedure takes years off your appearance.

My strong recommendation is to have a consultation with an ophthalmic plastic surgeon, an eye surgeon who specializes in plastic surgery, such as Dr. Daniel Townsend at SkinHealth. You want to find a surgeon who has lots of experience, and Dr. Townsend has successfully performed over 10,000 of these procedures.

LAW OF ATTRACTION

Channing Tatum and Jonah Hill keep bromance alive.

21 Jump Street ★★★½

Starring Channing Tatum, Jonah Hill, Brie Larson, Dave Franco, Rob Riggle and Ice Cube. Based on the TV show created by Patrick Hasburgh and Stephen J. Cannell. Story by Michael Bacall and Jonah Hill. Screenplay by Michael Bacall. Directed by Phil Lord and Chris Miller. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

WHILE WE'RE ALL bemoaning the spring movie doldrums, here comes a potty-mouthed spoof of Fox's late-1980s howler, a TV show that sent fresh-faced young cops (one of them a protean, sax-playing Johnny Depp) undercover to narc out some nasty high school dope dealers. Godfathered by the prolific TV impresario Stephen J. Cannell, the production was overly earnest, ending with public service announcements and pleas for young viewers to make use of confidential hotlines, like 1-800-COCAINE. The big-screen reboot, by contrast, boasts at least a hundred different slang terms for male genitalia. This is not an unwelcome development.

I wasn't convinced the art of cinema really needed yet another revamp of a dimly remembered TV program, but one of the nicest things about the new 21 Jump Street is that it's terrific where you least expect it.

Fast, funny and smarter than its dunce-cap demeanor initially lets on, 21 Jump Street stars Channing Tatum and Jonah Hill as mismatched partners Jenko and Schmidt. They're an inspired pairing. Like Jonah Hill's most recent on-screen sparring partner Brad Pitt, the absurdly handsome Tatum suffered a rocky start to his career, which left him stranded in heartthrob roles prone to wooden delivery. But as with Pitt, Tatum has the soul of a clown. Indeed, one of the film's chief pleasures is seeing his inner goofball unshackled, playing dumb with such an endearing puppy-dog quality. It's the kind of inspired comic turn that's a lot more difficult than it looks.

What's most enjoyable about the duo's unexpected chemistry is that they genuinely seem to like each other, and often shout it from the rooftops.

Though slimmed down to a point where we're no longer worried he might suffer a heart attack between scenes, Hill remains a big doughy ball of need. Having abandoned his once-trademark bluster, he's finally learned to modulate that high-pitched voice, coming in under the radar with muttered asides and off-kilter line readings. What's most enjoyable about the duo's unexpected chemistry is that they genuinely seem to like each other, and often shout it from the rooftops. Theirs is the most effusive bromance we've seen in the unfortunately named genre.

Which is a good thing, as their friendship is put to the test in a daunting assignment. As the police force is "reviving a cancelled program because the creatively bankrupt people in charge have run out of ideas and now just recycle old shit from the '80s," Jenko and Schmidt are tasked with infiltrating a designer drug ring that operates out of a wealthy, suburban high school.

Michael Bacall's script (from a story penned with Hill) has a grand time with the changes in the teen zeitgeist over the seven long years since Jenko and Schmidt graduated. Nothing dates quicker than concepts of cool, and Tatum is hysterically horrified as all the popular kids now care about the environment and preach deviant concepts like diversity and tolerance. In a nifty role reversal, once geeky Schmidt finds himself embraced by the in-crowd, while Jenko's dumb-jock moves lead to social pariah status.

Just self-aware enough without becoming obnoxious, Jump Street costars Ice Cube as the angry black police captain, urging his detectives to "embrace your stereotypes." The punch line, of course, being that stereotypes aren't all that reliable anymore, and I can think of few things funnier in recent films than Tatum's burgeoning rapport with the science nerds and his misadventures in a class he keeps mispronouncing as "ap-chemistry." When it gets really interesting, 21 Jump Street becomes more like a dude-comedy remake of Francis Ford Coppola's Peggy Sue Got Married, wondering what you'd do differently, if given a second crack at high school.

Venture across the multiplex hall and you'll find screenwriter Bacall's credit on the vile teenage party movie Project X, so the lion's share of the credit here must belong to directors Phil Lord and Christopher Miller, making the transition to live-action filmmaking after the well-regarded Cloudy With a Chance of Meatballs. They bring a cartoonish visual energy to the action sequences, and there's a particular running gag about explosions that had me in stitches.

But ultimately the movie becomes a superstar coming-out party for Channing Tatum and Jonah Hill. Theirs isn't just chemistry, it's winning "ap-chemistry." ✖✖✖

TINKER TAILOR

Gotye
plays at House of Blues on March 29.

WALLY DE BACKER inhabits a seemingly unreal world. Under the stage name Gotye, he recorded much of his album Making Mirrors in his parents' barn along Australia's idyllic southeast coast, manipulating samples from both records and live instruments.

"A record is an inherent unreality—short of one microphone capturing a band or a musician live in a space, and even then there's the reproduction of the transmission," De Backer says from a tour break in Belgium. "Sampling is one of the most interesting pockets in how to craft those unreal spaces."

But one of the final songs that De Backer honed for the eclectic album made his life increasingly unreal. A video for "Somebody That I Used to Know," an evocative duet with New Zealand singer Kimbra, has topped 100 million hits on YouTube, bringing worldwide attention. Gotye sold out a U.S. tour that hits House of Blues on March 29, with Kimbra as both his cameo guest and opening act.

> "It's an ode to people who have a strong but quaint love of peculiar pieces of technology."

Luckily, De Backer delayed his album until he found the right female singer for the job. "I still had the sense that the song had a strong enough spark to be worth waiting for," says the 31-year-old musician, who coined Gotye (pronounced Go-tee-ay) after Gauthier, the French equivalent of his name Wouter (Walter).

Like many of his songs, "Somebody That I Used to Know" shows De Backer knows how to offset moody, textural music with stark human emotion—not easy to achieve when you favor synthetic experimentation.

Even in conversation, he lapses into jargon like "multisampling," "pitchshifting" and "reamping," terms for techniques that make his music click. The childlike marimba hook in "Somebody That I Used to Know" came from sampling the acoustic instrument note-for-note, then altering it on a computer. "It's chopped up to make a melody," he says. "But it needed to be shifted into key."

That ability to create virtual instruments paid dividends on "Eyes Wide Open." During a trip to the Outback, De Backer recorded the sound of metal wires he struck on an outdoor installation called the Winton Musical Fence and used those samples to craft the song's bass parts. He added a galloping beat on live drums, his primary instrument since playing in a high-school grunge band, though he favors music that's "more considered and more composed."

"Eyes Wide Open" marked the first time he played live drums on a Gotye album. Making Mirrors also features bass (largely played by longtime friend Lucas Taranto), horns, guitar and keyboards, though De Backer still incorporates samples culled from vinyl.

For the dub-style "State of the Art," he sped up a horn break from a Taiwanese pop-folk record he bought at a thrift store and blended it with a Turkish drum sound. Then De Backer warped his voice in effects and fashioned an ode to the Lowrey cotillion, an electronic organ he embraces for its odd, synthetic patches.

"It's also a bit of an ode to people like myself who have that strong but fairly quaint love of peculiar pieces of technology," he says, "and for who it'd be a struggle to communicate those feelings to other people, to younger generations."

Gotye still crosses generations musically. "I Feel Better" injects a Motown-style number inspired by Martha Reeves' "Dancing in the Street," with a bracing tambourine pulse that De Backer calls "the hand of God."

But Making Mirrors mainly draws on '80s influences, including Kate Bush, Godley & Crème, Depeche Mode, Peter Gabriel (echoed in De Backer's hushed vocals on darkly atmospheric tracks) and Sting in his higher register. "I love a lot of '80s records, so it does come out," the Belgian-Australian says. The electro-dance glide "In Your Light" even evokes A-ha and George Michael.

And it was all mostly born in his parents' barn on Victoria's Mornington Peninsula. "I had free time, and a good amount of space to set up gear and tinker," says De Backer, who's playing live percussion and samples as part of his five-piece touring band. "Digital technology allows us such great control." ✖✖✖

MODERN FAMILY

The madness of catering to tykes

ONE OF MY PARTNERS has a seven-year-old daughter. He came into the office this week and said, "This is a first. Marlo's been invited to a half-year birthday party."

"What's a half-year birthday party?"

"Like, you're seven and a half years," he said.

"With presents?"

"Yeah," he said. "With presents."

What's next, half Easter? Half Hanukkah? Modern parenting is off the rails. The lunatics have taken over the asylum when the children run the household. So I started to ask friends about their adventures on the home front. One woman, a grandmother, told me, "My daughter-in-law just had a baby. Before I can hold the baby she makes me rub sanitizer on my hands. Fine. But if I put the child down and pick her up in six minutes, she makes me spray my hands again. Geez, wrap the kid in Bubble Wrap, and have a doctor stay in the guest room. But I have my revenge."

"What's your revenge?" I asked.

"When my daughter-in-law isn't looking," she said, "I lick the baby's cheeks."

"What is it?" my friend Stew asked me. "Guilt? You can't go anywhere without your children. Look at these Christmas cards," he said, fanning out dozens of them, all with snapshots of glamorous holidays: Tanzania, Paris, the Sonoran Desert, skiing in Chile, pointing at turtles in Turtleland or whatever. "Why not call it, 'Mammonmas,' instead of Christmas? These cards all trumpet: What recession? And: Not only are we doing great, but we have the perfect family."

After pausing to catch his breath, Stew continued. "But the best are the holiday letters. I call 'em the 'holiday cringe letters,' because their sole intent is to let you know how pitiful and dysfunctional your family is, and how perfect and superior theirs is. Whatever happened to Jesus and Mary in a manger for Christmas? Didn't they have a perfect enough family?"

I agree with Stew. I keep a Christmas card taped to the middle of the bookshelf in my office. It shows the ideal family: two boys and two girls, Mom and Dad smiling away. The letter accompanying it proclaims their honors, tributes, testimonials, Ivy League schools, all stars. Ah. But I know the truth: drug abuse, alcohol rehab, battles over alleged infidelities, bad decisions, horrendous boyfriends, inappropriate girlfriends. It's controlling on every level—with every step for the family programmed.

"What a handsome family," visitors say to me.

"Yes," I answer. "Aren't they?"

Contrast is everything.

Stew keeps coming back to me, excited about the idiocy around him. "Do you know there's a website called stalkermom.com? There are birthday parties for eight-year-old girls where they bring in salon people to do manicures and pedicures for the kids. Are they all channeling JonBenet Ramsey?"

He continued, "There are moms who won't accept other parents as chaperones at events. For these events, you have to sign up for activities in advance. The stalker moms say to their female friends, 'I'll go sign up all the kids. Happy to do it. It's a pain, but I'm up early.'

"'Fine,' the other mothers say. Then they show up with their kids and are told, 'Sorry, no one signed them up. They can't get in.'"

Stew's take was, "She wanted her kids to get the best activities. Which she could accomplish if she shot the competitors down."

My wife used to say, when our kids were little, "I married you, not the children. I need a vacation from them, as wonderful as they may be." Sounded good to me, and I still believe in it. In my view, after a while, being totally immersed in your kids makes you forget why you got married in the first place.

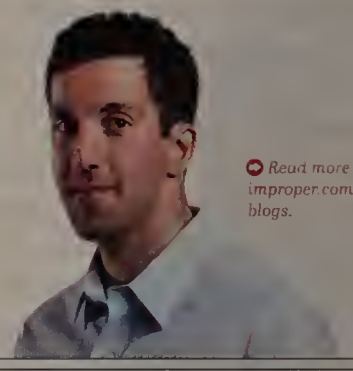
Taking this back in time, at my grandfather's house there was the dictum that children should be seen and not heard. When his three boys got out of college, my grandfather basically told them, "I've raised and educated you. Have a nice life." Harsh, but it forced self-reliance.

I had a brother-in-law who was shipped off to Groton School from Manhattan when he was nine. This was the English boarding-school model for the upper class: Ship them off as soon as possible, toughen them up, and get them out from underfoot. When my brother-in-law was 11, the family chauffeur picked him up for Christmas break and, on the ride home, informed him that his parents were getting a divorce. No wonder that the cycle today has swung so far in the opposite direction. Sooner or later, things go to extremes, until the madness at either end cracks.

So we'll shake our heads over parents hiring ghostwriters for college essays, buying condos in towns where their kids go to school, or over a birthday party for four-year-old girls where the entertainment is live baby tigers. But the capper is the hedge fund manager who hired a personal chef for his six-year-old. What's his specialty, Fruity Pebbles with truffle shavings?

Yet, even as I view all of this with contempt, I seem to remember that, in college, my mother used to arrive weekly with my ironed laundry and carry away the dirty clothes in paper bags from S.S. Pierce.

Guilty.



Speaking of parenting and grandparenting, my latest book will be in stores and online (and audio version) this month. It's called, No One Ever Told Us That: A Grandfather's Letters on Life and Money. I hope it's both unconventional and street smart. ×××

BINGE BENEFITS

How to party your way to enlightenment

Read more at improper.com/blogs.

MY FIRST WAVE OF bachelor parties arrived in my mid-20s. Back then I was impulsive, unattached and able to kick a hangover with a breath of fresh air and a greasy breakfast. Wet behind the ears and still imbued with collegiate curiosity, I gathered life lessons from the haze. For example: Five beers fit inside a Frisbee, never use a blow-up doll as a pillow and if you give a stripper permission to whip you with a belt, you'll both walk away scarred.

A second wave of bachelor parties arrived in my early 30s—three in a row this month, in fact. Years ago, I would've met this with breathless anticipation, but now the prospect gave me night sweats. The first one was a Florida bender attended by my rowdiest pals. After considering my obligations to my career, my finances, my loved ones and my health, I decided to skip it. I realized I'd made the adult decision when a friend came back with a broken elbow—it hung purple and distended like a waterlogged eggplant. As the two of us drove up to Montreal for party number two, I was already thinking of how to best dodge a hangover for the return trip. Maturity, it seemed, had finally, sadly arrived. But then we spent half the drive crafting dirty texts for our iPhones to read aloud, so I didn't worry too much.

I like to believe that I remain open to life's teachings even in its debauched moments. During our Montreal excursion, we smoked cigars and discussed Apple's IPO. We debated the situation in Syria. And, while socializing in the hotel before a classy steak dinner, we spent an hour and a half talking about poop. One guy later said it was the most fun he had all weekend. Another agreed. The lesson: While you may now be an inner curmudgeon, you've still got your inner three-year-old.

It was a younger crowd, and I admit to fleeting moments of feeling superior, the height of my arrogance arriving after someone suggested that, given my tenuous likeness, I be introduced around a bar as Maroon 5 singer Adam Levine. No matter how many women laughed in my face, it was OK because "it's a numbers game, man." This spurred another beer order and the discovery that while circumstances may lead you to climb on a high horse, you can make that nag drink as much as you want. But a sense of superiority fades when you're passed out on the floor.

Ironically, the third weekend of debauchery marked a very adult turn. I'd known the bachelor for almost 14 years, and while I normally can't even plan a trip to the refrigerator in advance, I found myself tasked with arranging the evening's transportation, making reservations and writing down-payment checks for our lodging. Suddenly, a binge had turned into an administrative job.

For our big night out, we wanted our nerdy bachelor to wear a costume that both humiliated him and broadcast his true character to the outside world. After bandying ideas around, I had a flash: Batman. It turned out to be the perfect choice, because when we gave him the costume he dropped his pants to reveal the pattern on his underwear: Batman. Apparently, the adage used by newlyweds holds true with old friends: When you know, you know.

Of course, the price for that sort of insight is experience and, ultimately, adulthood. These are the things you reflect on when it's 9 am, and you're on your hands and knees scrubbing stripper heel marks from a hardwood floor. But you're not alone in having to grow up. With each friend who gets married, the gang comes together to mark the passage. A bachelor party is a happy rebellion, a brief moment of uncivilized, futile resistance against change. And when the ritual generates a headache that could crack a skull like the crust of a crème brûlée, you're all but praying for the passage of time. ×××

Helpful tips for winning the real estate game

Read more at improper.com/blogs.

IT'S SPRING, WHICH MEANS real estate season is heating up. If you're looking to purchase your first place, you're in luck, because right now is the best time to buy. If you're putting your house on the market, you're also in luck, because there's never been a better time to sell. So if you're one of the thousands of people who live indoors, it's time to start packing. But whichever side of the fence you're on, you need to be informed. Here are some of my hard-learned real estate tips.

First, let's talk about selling. Context is critical. One way to increase your property value is to make sure your neighbors all have presentable houses. For instance, if your neighbors have shoddy aluminum siding, sneak over to their house at night and install new kiln-dried southern cypress clapboards. If they object, build a large cardboard replica of a fancy mansion and slide it over their dumpy home whenever you've scheduled a showing.

As for your house, you don't need a total renovation to improve its chances on the market. I can't overstate the importance of staging: You must surround your house with staging that's at least 20 feet high. Once the staging is erected, turn your attention toward optimizing the presentation of your home's interior (the real estate term for this is "attractifying").

To make your house appear larger, get rid of excess seating and bureaus and replace them with dollhouse furniture. If your house is a ranch, install a staircase in your living room. When buyers ask to see the second floor, say, "The baby is sleeping right now."

Now, I know this next one is a cliché, but it's true: Location, location, doorbell. No matter how nice your house is, buyers will be turned off if your lot is below the low-tide line or your doorbell doesn't work. So you should always tune your doorbell before each showing. As the old saying goes, knockers are balkers; bellers are sellers.

Now that your house is ready, how much can you get for it? When pricing your house or condo, look at comps. "Comp" is real estate shorthand for "compost pile." Examine nearby houses and see how high their compost piles are. The higher the better, as this denotes prosperity.

When listing a property, some homeowners use an affordable multiple listings service (MLS) to circumvent hiring a realtor. I asked a realtor about the growing popularity of for-sale-by-owner services, and she said, "It'd be a shame if you didn't have a realtor, and someone scheduled a showing and then canceled at the last minute. A real shame. I'm not saying it's gonna happen to you. And I'm not saying that people will come look at your house and steal things. That'd be terrible. I'd hate for that to happen. But realtors can make all these little problems go away, for a modest commission. Think about it."

When setting your price, Zillow can be helpful for pegging the value of your property. Using a proprietary algorithm, Zillow adjusts for recent local sales, macro real estate trends and hundreds of other factors to arrive at a price that is precisely aligned with the market, plus or minus 92 percent.

OK, so now that your house is correctly priced, and you've hung new photos of a less ugly family, your place is as good as sold. Which means you, the seller, will soon be a buyer.

To purchase a new property, you'll need to be prequalified. A few years ago, nearly anyone could get prequalified, but these days banks are stricter. That said, many buyers should have no trouble getting prequalified with as little as 80 percent down. And while the 30-year fixed mortgage is back in vogue, you should keep an open mind about innovative products like the 5/1/2/7/8 Ultra Adjustable Interest-Plus Amortization Reverse Entendre loan, which is still available in certain counties in Delaware.

Next, determine the property type you wish to purchase. The three most popular choices are single family, condo and houseboat. Houseboats aren't for everyone, but they're a nice option for people who want to live in the company of fellow private detectives. If you opt for a condo, ask questions about the rules. Some condo boards restrict pets to 25 pounds or less, so now might be the time to have that tough talk with your dog about his weight.

Once you've identified the perfect place, it's time to make an offer. Shoot for a number that's the most you'd pay and the least they'd accept. Be prepared to respond to a counteroffer with a parry and a flanking move to the left.

Congratulations! The deal fell through. Now you get to start over. But you'd better act quickly, before all the real estate is gone. ✖✖✖

TAKE 5

The School of Sports {RICH LEVINE}

TIME FOR ANOTHER TITLE

NEXT YEAR? Hopes dim for the C's.

5 CHAMPIONSHIP THOUGHTS

The Intro It hasn't even been a year since a team from Boston won a championship, but that doesn't mean it's too early to start clamoring for another. So here's a quick rundown of Boston's Big 4 and their unofficial chances of bringing home the hardware. (Or as they say in Canada: "Bringing home the hardware.")

The Celtics Unless Greg Stiemsma really is the next Bill Russell, the C's don't have a shot this year. And unless something spectacular happens in the off-season, it might be a while before we see Banner 18. Somebody better keep an eye on Gino. This has coke binge written all over it. Chances of winning: 3.5 out of 10.

The Red Sox The talent's there, but the intangibles are suspect. Not to mention, there's a lot more competition in the American League. Still, if the hitters just hit, the pitchers pitch and the manager shuts up long enough to keep everybody sane, the Sox are a major threat to win their third World Series in nine years. And this time… it's for Pesky! Chances of winning: 7 out of 10.

The Bruins The B's were awful this "winter," but they'll be ready to roll when the title defense begins on April 11. Of course, there's the question of how much gas is left in Tim Thomas' tank. Says Thomas: "There'd be more if Obama didn't make gas so damn expensive!" But I think there's enough for one more run. Chances of winning: 7.5 out of 10.

The Patriots They'll be better on both sides of the ball, and after last year's run to the Super Bowl, the young core is all grown up. Throw in Brady, Belichick and a full season of Tiquan Underwood, and it's no surprise that Vegas has the Pats as early favorites to win it all. Chances of winning: 8 out of 10

1 ONE PREDICTABLE EARLY EXIT

Jermaine O'Neal's received a ton of criticism over his time in Boston, and deservedly so. But isn't Danny Ainge more to blame? He's the one who forked over $12 million dollars for what's left of this former All-Star, which—now that J.O.'s officially done—comes to more than $200,000 per game.

2 WOULD YOU RATHERS

Take a Zdeno Chara Slap Shot to the Face, or Swallow a Nail? You're taking a pretty big risk with the nail—it could puncture an organ, and you know it's got to sting on the way out—but if the other option is to French kiss a 100 MPH puck? I'll roll the dice. Doctor says I need more iron, anyway.

Eat Nothing but Stale Bread and Expired Spam for a Week, or Drive 20 Straight Hours to Florida With Vince Wilfork Sitting on Your Lap? I'm sure Vince would be a lot of fun (I hear he loves the license-plate game), but how long could your body last? I say longer than it would on stale bread and spam. So let's do it, Vince! I'll get started on the playlist.

3 BUSY QUARTERBACKS

Mile-High Manning I wanted Manning to join the 49ers—mostly for the Randy Moss combo—but I'll settle on seeing No. 18 in Denver. If anything, just to find out how all his whining will be affected by the altitude. (Ah… nice to have you back, Peyton).

Timmy and the Jets I wanted Tebow to join the Jaguars—mostly because it'd be a better test of his divinity—but I'll settle for him jumping on with the Jets. If anything, just to find out how long it takes for him to build a new school house for all of Antonio Cromartie's children. (Ah… nice to have you back, Antonio Cromartie's children).

Brady Gives Back Meanwhile, I simply wanted Tom Brady to enjoy a safe and happy off-season. After all, the man deserves it. But what does he do? Oh, just restructure his contract and save the Pats another $7 million dollars in cap space. (Ah… thanks, Tom. Nice to know that you'll never change teams. Ever. Right?)

4 DATES TO WATCH

3/31: The Final Four hits New Orleans. Anyone know the spread on Missouri/Duke?

4/1: It's Matt Albers Day in Boston. Anyone wearing Albers No. 32 jersey rides the T for free and gets unlimited munchkins at Dunkin' Donuts.

4/5: The Red Sox open the season in Detroit. Just wondering: Who'd win a hot-dog eating contest between Prince Fielder and Josh Beckett?

4/10: The Celtics take what's left of their talents to South Beach.

"You expect
be superficial."

Soroff On MIRIAM SHOR

The GCB actress tells us about casting annoyances, drinking Kristin Chenoweth's Kool-Aid and why Darren Star's a mensch.

THE COSTAR OF ABC'S BUBBLY NEW NIGHTTIME ESTROGEN-FEST, GCB (Good Christian Belles, based on Kim Gatlin's book, Good Christian Bitches), Miriam Shor was born in Minneapolis and grew up in the U.S. and Italy. She earned a bachelor of fine arts in theater/drama at the University of Michigan and rose to prominence in Hedwig and the Angry Inch, a role she later reprised on film. She has appeared in the movies Shortbus, Bedazzled and The Cake Eaters, while her TV credits include Swingtown, The West Wing, My Name Is Earl, Damages and the HBO remake of Mildred Pierce. She lives in New York and has a house in the Berkshires.

Jonathan Soroff: Are you a good Christian belle?
Miriam Shor: Other than the fact that I'm half-Jewish and a Yankee, completely. Seriously? Not at all. I'm about as far from a good Christian belle as a girl can get.

You got your first professional acting job in college?
Yeah. I first realized I wanted to become an actor the first time I got a paycheck. I was like, "Oh! You're going to pay me? OK, I'll do this, because I'd do it for free, and it sure beats waiting tables."

How do you think audiences perceive you based on the characters you've played?
They either view me as a man, if they saw me in Hedwig, or they view me as a hard-ass, because they've seen me play a meth-addicted woman in Damages, or they view me as uptight if they saw me in Swingtown. The best part is that I get to be all those things. That's the fun part of being an actor.

Person people mistake you for?
I used to get Janeane Garofalo when I was younger, which I took as a huge compliment because I think she's awesome and brilliant and adorable. These days, people mistake me for someone they went to high school with.

How's your Italian these days?
Awesome. Although it used to be the same for me as English, just as natural. Now it takes me a full week of total immersion, or a stiff vodka and tonic.

Are you a good Italian cook?
If by that you mean being able to order from the best Italian restaurants, yes. I'm a New Yorker, and plenty of New Yorkers are good cooks, but it's hard to motivate myself when five feet outside my door are a million amazing restaurants.

But you're a mother.
I know! And kids expect you to feed them, which I didn't realize. They're very demanding. So I've had to figure that out.

When you're in L.A., do you feel like a fish out of water?
No. I feel like a fish in outer space. It's a cliché. It's lame. And it's beautiful, it's fun, the nature's amazing. My daughter has a blast. I have family out there. I even have a good time. I just don't feel grounded, because literally I'm not. In L.A., you're always in a car.

Isn't it also the superficiality?
Well, no, because there's superficiality everywhere, and you expect Hollywood to be superficial.

Working with Kristin Chenoweth must be a real trip.
Let me tell you something: I love that woman and love working with her. She's like liquid sunshine. I'll drink that Kristin Chenoweth Kool-Aid all day long.

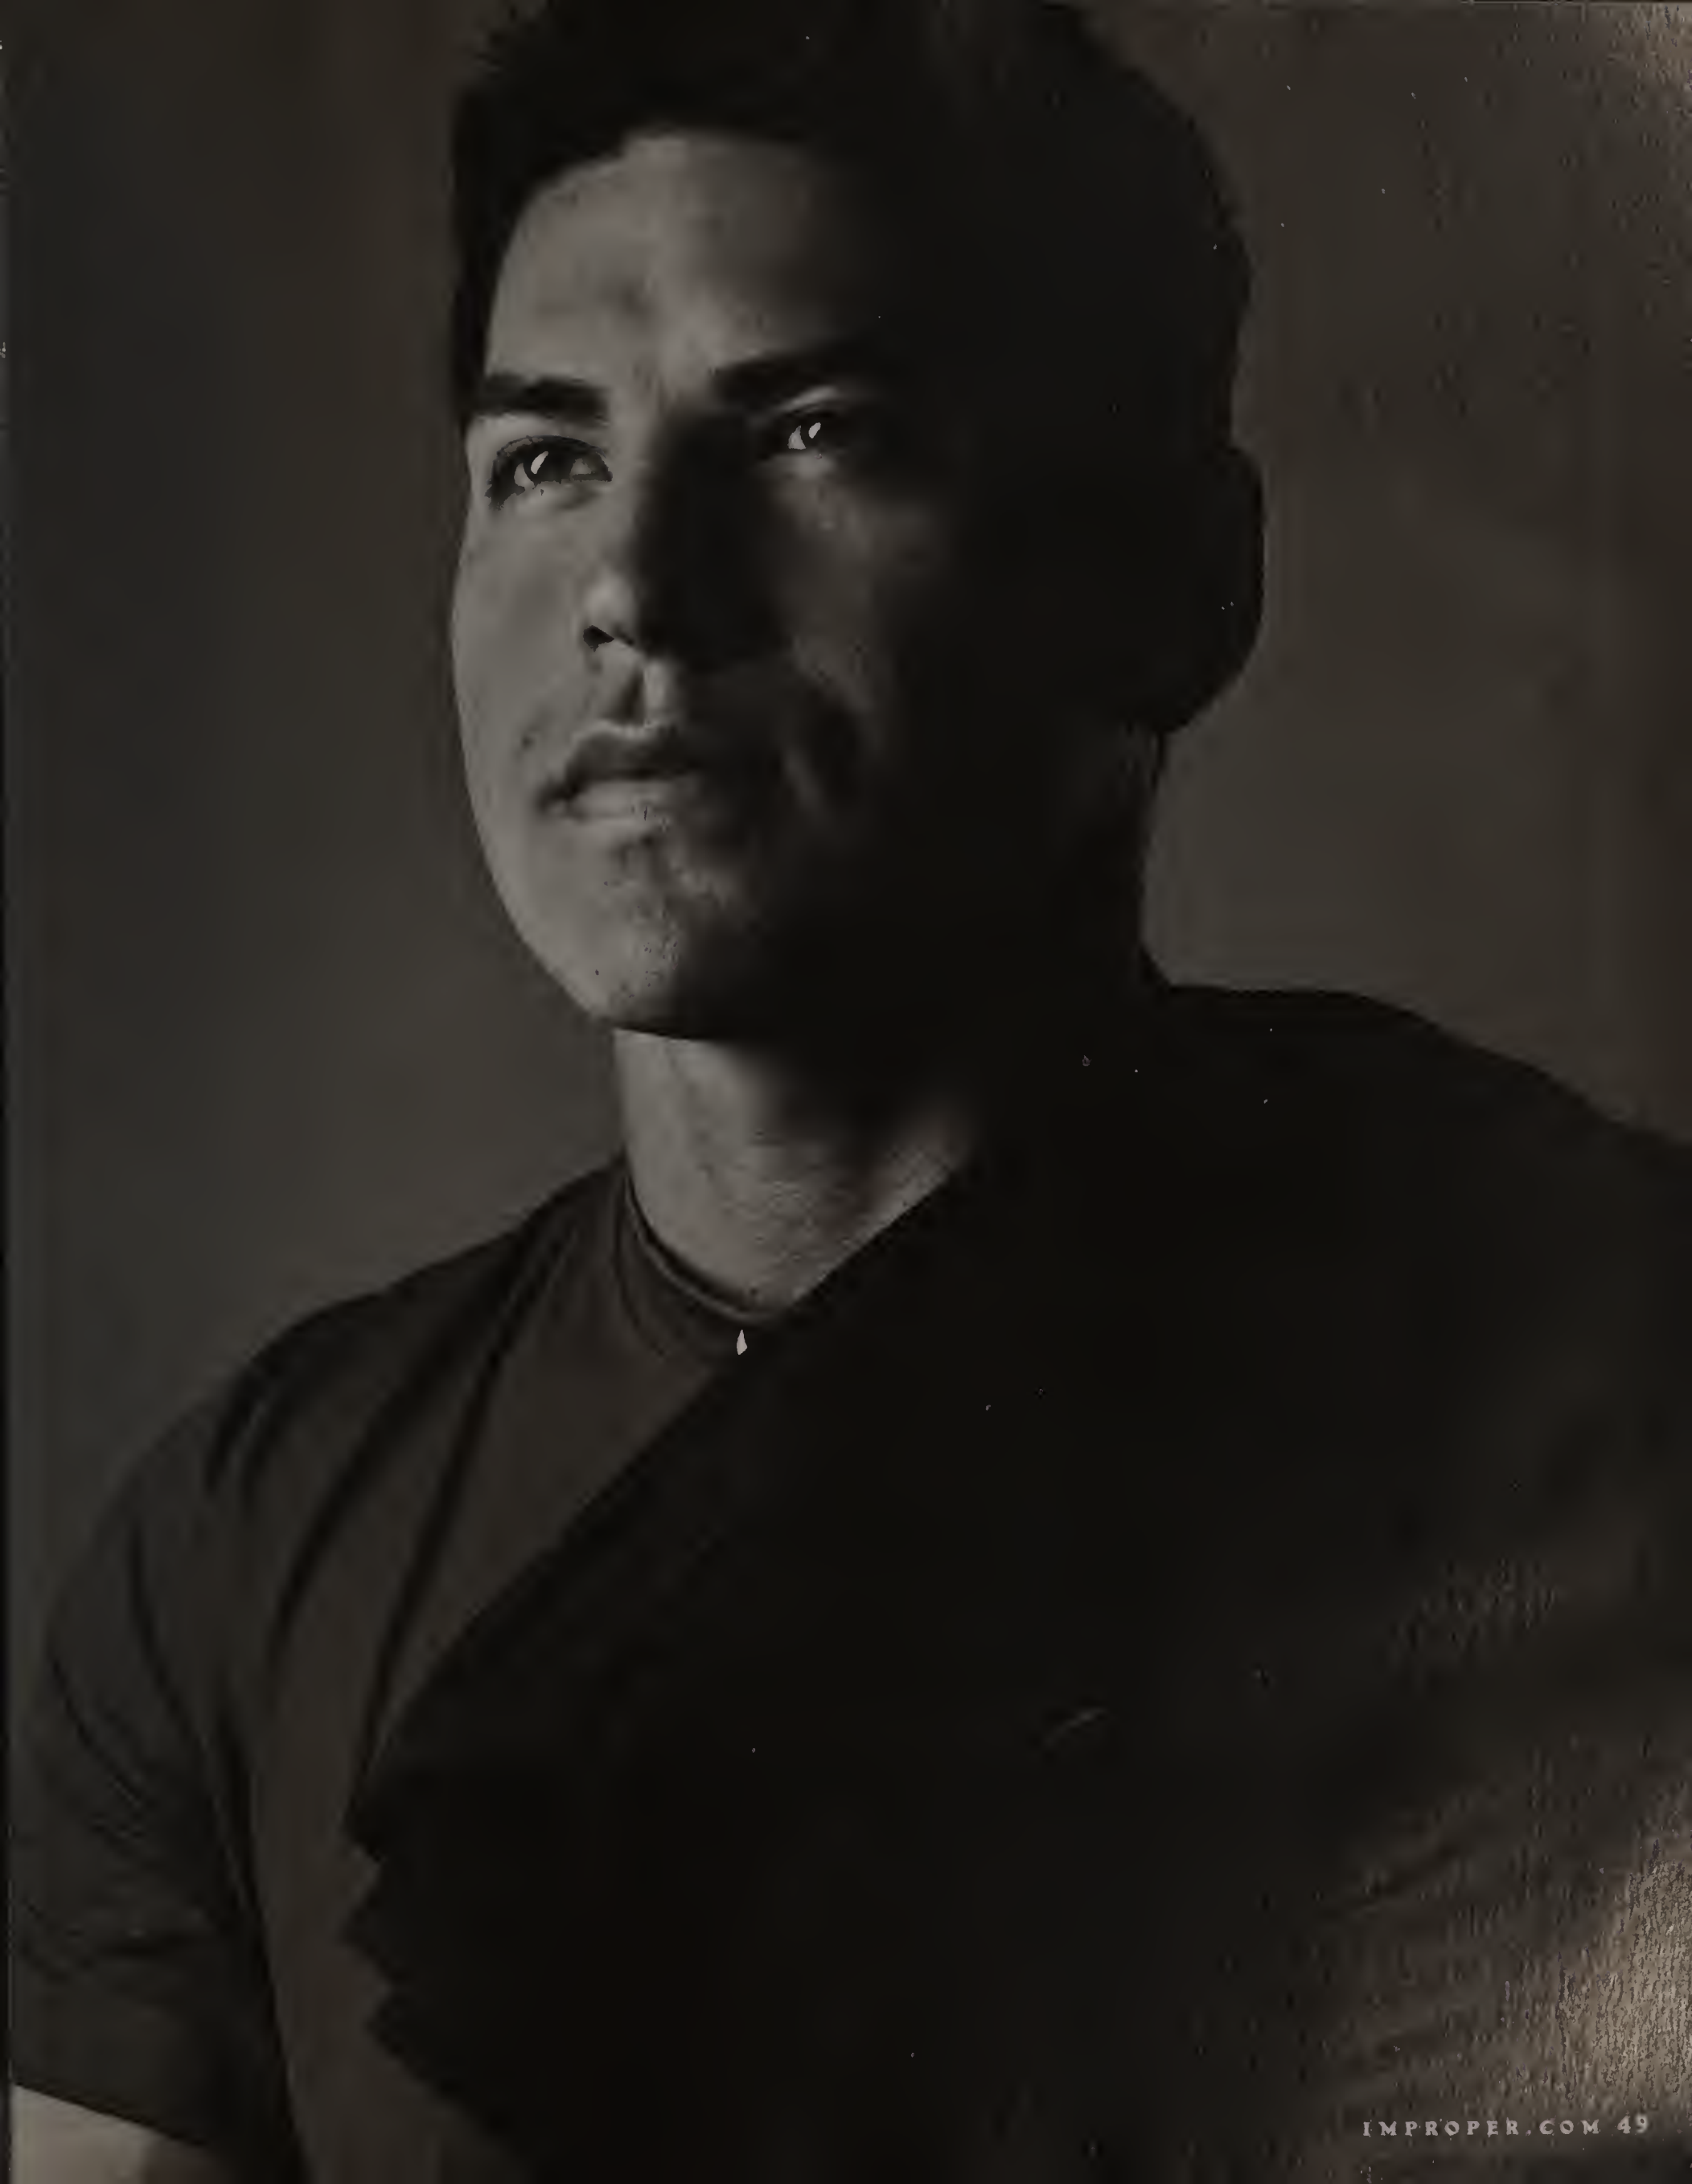
Your character on GCB is named Cricket. Would you kill yourself if that was your actual name?
[Laughs.] We have an amazing legal system in this country, so I think I'd walk myself down to the courthouse and change it. Maybe to Sunshine. Or Lamp. And I'd like to point out that it's not just Cricket. It's Cricket Caruth-Reilly. Let's throw a hyphen in there. It attempts to be flowery, but it's actually hyper-hard. I think it's delightful.

Can Sex and the City creator and GCB producer Darren Star do no wrong?
I guess not. It seems like he kind of has his finger on the pulse a little bit, and he seems interested and fascinated by women. I applaud him for that. What I think was so great about Sex and the City in terms of pop culture was that it showed that women who aren't in their 20s have a lot to say and are super-hot, and more importantly, the consumers you better appreciate. And that's just one of his home runs. Plus, he's a mensch.

Full-frontal nudity?
As an actor watching Michael Fassbender in Shame, I completely appreciate it. In fact, he's a fine, fine actor, but I think he should be required to be naked in all of his roles. As for women? I've read scripts that say, "and then she opens the mail naked." Or "then she vacuums the house naked." And I'm like, "Really?" But I'm not really the actress they go to when they want a bunch of tushy shots.

Anyone you'd never work with again?
[Laughs.] I'd never work with myself again! I'm really difficult to work with. Seriously? When I talk to my friends or family who have so-called real jobs, and they tell me about the lunatics they work with, I think I've gotten off easy. Everyone has to work with aholes at some point. But I've had the great fortune of working with incredibly interesting, colorful people who I had a blast with.

Do you ever want to direct?
Yes, and any director I've ever worked with will probably tell you that I do anyway. [Laughs.]



Most annoying thing about being an actor?
I guess things like, "Could you just play it more blonde?" Because I'm like, "Have you not heard of peroxide?" Or the times I've gone in for a part and they've said, "We're looking for a really beautiful woman," or "We need someone younger." So I'm excited to be able to play everyone in Hollywood's grandmother in a few years, and I'm glad I never had to base my career on being the great beauty. That would be hard, I think. ×××

AFTER LAST SEASON'S CAREER HIGHS, RED SOX CENTERFIELDER JACOBY ELLSBURY'S NEVER LOOKED STRONGER.

BY MICHAEL HOLLEY
PHOTOGRAPHED BY KERRY BRETT

ONE OF THE FIRST TIMES JACOBY ELLSBURY'S ATHLETICISM WAS QUESTIONED—EVEN DOUBTED—HE DID SOMETHING THAT COMES NATURALLY. HE EXHALED, TOOK A FEW STEPS AND ELEVATED THE CONVERSATION. HE DIDN'T EVEN HAVE TO MOVE HIS LIPS.

SWING FOR THE FENCES Ellsbury didn't have a bad month all year.

This was seven years ago on a rainy and drab Monday afternoon in a San Diego gym. Ellsbury was a 21-year-old centerfielder and Oregon State University's best player. The team's game against the University of San Diego had already been canceled due to the rain, so Ellsbury began working out. He was being watched by Dave Finley, a West Coast scout for the Red Sox who was intrigued by Ellsbury as a possible first-round pick, even though many other talent evaluators in major league baseball thought otherwise. The previous summer hadn't been a good one for Ellsbury—cut from the U.S. national team because he wasn't hitting, raising red flags with his struggles in the highly competitive Cape Cod Baseball League and, after all that, learning that he had an undetected broken bone in his right foot.

"I don't care what you've seen or heard," Pat Casey, Ellsbury's coach, said to Finley that February day in the gym. "This kid is unbelievable. He's dynamic. He can just do things that other players can't. He's a first-rounder if I've ever seen one."

Ellsbury had finished lifting and now had a basketball in his hands. The NBA's dunk contest had taken place over the past weekend, and Ellsbury's teammates were raving about things they'd seen two mammoth men, 6'11" Amar'e Stoudemire and 6'9" Josh Smith, accomplish in the contest.

"Oh, I can do that," claimed the 6'1" Ellsbury.

In a flash, Ellsbury was dribbling. He lobbed the ball off the backboard, leapt from just inside the free-throw line and slammed the ball through the basket with his left hand. His teammates went wild. Ellsbury landed and immediately grabbed his left elbow.

"My first thought was, 'Oh, s. It's hyperextended,'" Finley recalled.

It was far from an injury. Ellsbury held his elbow because he had gotten up so high that he nicked part of his arm on the rim and had the scratch to prove it. If iPhones had existed at the time, the scene would have been captured on video, tweeted, uploaded to YouTube and Facebook, and gone viral within the hour.

As it was, Finley had plenty of information to send back to his bosses in Boston. He had seen Ellsbury's raw power up close during the weightlifting session as well as during his time in the batting cage, and the scout was fairly certain that Ellsbury would acquire the strength that would allow him to hit the big-leaguers' inside pitches with power.
He had witnessed glimpses of Ellsbury's personality, his confidence without arrogance, his neon talent that spoke for itself (although the man spoke briefly or not at all). Even before Finley had seen him airborne in San Diego, Ellsbury was one of his favorite prospects for the 2005 draft. Now, he had an impressive story to add to the scouting reports that'd be pored over by Theo Epstein, the Sox' general manager at the time, his assistant Ben Cherington and director of scouting Jason McLeod.

"I guess word traveled pretty quickly in the office," Finley says. "I got a call from Theo and he said, 'So, tell me about this dunk.'"

A lot has happened to Ellsbury since he had people on both coasts buzzing about an impromptu dunk in Southern California. Indeed, the Sox drafted him in the first round in 2005. Two years later, he made his big-league debut and helped cap the season with flair as the Sox won the World Series. But while injury stirred some doubts about predraft Ellsbury's performance, the same thing happened in the pros in 2010.

For reasons difficult to comprehend, the Sox moved Ellsbury, arguably the fastest and most athletic player the franchise has had in a half century—if not ever—from center field to left. In his place they inserted 37-year-old Mike Cameron, a player with whom Ellsbury was extremely familiar. As a kid growing up in the small town of Madras, Ore., Ellsbury rooted for the baseball team closest to him in the Pacific Northwest, the Seattle Mariners. Cameron was a great defensive outfielder for the Mariners when Ellsbury was a teenager. By the time they were teammates in Boston, it should've been Cameron who was watching Ellsbury on TV. Instead, while playing left, Ellsbury collided with former teammate Adrián Beltré and broke several ribs. His season dropped to 18 games, leaving him with an aberrational .192 batting average. Once again, people raised questions about him, but now they were much more personal. There were whispers about his commitment to the team and shouts on the airwaves about his toughness and manhood.

"It killed him that some people thought he didn't want to play," Casey, his college coach, says. "It's what he wants to do more than anything. He always wants to play. I remember when he first got hurt, he told me, 'Coach, after the game, I couldn't even breathe.'"

HIS UNCOMMON SPEED MEANS THAT HE CAN WIN GAMES WITH HIS LEGS, EVEN WHEN OPPONENTS ARE EXPECTING HIM TO RUN.

While he continued to get support from the majority of Sox fans, a vocal minority debated whether he should be traded.

"I knew that wasn't going to happen," Terry Francona, former Sox manager–turned–ESPN analyst says. "Theo is a pretty smart guy. Trading a player when his value is at its lowest point? That would be dumb. Plus, man, he's a pretty special talent. He's the kind of guy that if you sent him to the NFL Combine, some team would want to draft him, even though he doesn't want to play football."

It didn't stop other teams from trying to pry Ellsbury away. Cherington, who replaced Epstein as GM last October, acknowledged that at least half a dozen teams called the Sox in the 2010 offseason with offers for Ellsbury. Most of them were checking to see if the Sox were caught up in the hysteria and willing to deal Ellsbury in baseball's version of a red-tag sale.

Ellsbury heard the critics and was actually fueled by some of them. "But those aren't the people I draw my strength from," he says. "I knew I was going to use the time off to learn and come back stronger. At the start of the season, I was confident. I knew I had put the work in, and I knew I was in a position to let my game speak for itself. So that's what I was excited about."

The result was a season in which Ellsbury reached career highs with 32 home runs, 46 doubles, 105 runs batted in, and a .552 slugging percentage. He also stole 39 bases, returned to center field and won a Gold Glove, and finished second in the American League MVP race. "If you think about it," Cherington says, "he didn't have one bad month all year." Even when the Sox missed the play-offs with a historically rotten September for a contending team, Ellsbury hit .358 with 8 home runs. Not only did the season squash any debate about trading Ellsbury, it served as a reminder of just how rare such a versatile player is in Boston. For years, the Sox relied on traditional, middle-of-the-order batters who seduced crowds primarily with their home-run abilities. As Finley, the scout, predicted years earlier, Ellsbury now has the strength to hit the ball out of the park, too. But his uncommon speed means that he can win games with his legs, even when opponents are expecting him to run. In his first five seasons, he has already done a few things that some players never accomplish in a career: stolen home, scored from second base on a wild pitch and stolen four bases in a game.

Going into the 2012 season, with expectations based on last year's accomplishments, there's room for improvement both on and off the field. Francona says Ellsbury could take more control in center, learning to shade hitters to the left or right and directing the corner outfielders to follow his lead. One of his teammates and workout partners, Dustin Pedroia, marvels at his ability in the weight room, but is puzzled by some of his verbal limitations.

"His one-liners are horrible," says Pedroia, who may lead the Sox in that category. "I'll give you an example. A lot of the guys on the team call me 'Pee-wee.' So Jacoby will try to call me 'Herman.' You know, for Pee-wee Herman. Now, that's horrible. I always say to him, 'Come on, Jacoby. You've got to tighten your one-liner game up.'"

Ellsbury and Pedroia are each other's alter egos. Pedroia's words are brassy. Ellsbury's game is. Pedroia, the number-two hitter, is in constant motion on deck and in the batter's box. Ellsbury, ironically, seems in slow motion as the leadoff man—Pedroia says that umpires sometimes have to remind Ellsbury to get moving toward the plate at the start of games because he's so leisurely. Both of them claim that the other one is ruled by superstition.

"When I told him when I was leaving for spring training, he said, 'No, you can't leave then. Look what kind of year you had last year. We have to make sure we do everything the same way,'" Ellsbury says with a laugh. "Now he's telling people that I insisted we do it the same way. He's trying to put his superstitions on me."

Both are brimming with confidence, although you can hear it from the next county in Pedroia's case. With Ellsbury, it's just something you sense. Casey remembers recruiting Ellsbury out of high school, trying to get him to sign with Oregon State instead of the Tampa Bay Rays, who had drafted him in the 23rd round. Oregon State was offering development, an opportunity to be, as Casey put it, "on page one of Baseball America instead of page 38," and an education. The Rays were offering between $175,000 and $200,000.

"That was and still is a lot of money in Madras," Casey says. "We're talking about one of those towns that has the old-time saloons and the tumbleweeds rolling through. It takes big cojones to turn that down, and he had the confidence to do it."

Three years later, he was a first-round pick, signing for well over $1 million.

It shouldn't have surprised anyone. But, as Pedroia laughs, "What's wrong with the Red Sox scouting system? You have to dunk a basketball to get drafted?" ✖✖✖

10 QUESTIONS FOR THE NEW SOX SEASON

BY EZRA DYER

PHOTOGRAPHED BY MICHAEL IVINS/BOSTON RED SOX

FIVE YEARS IS A LONG TIME. Five years ago, the Red Sox looked like they'd decisively entered a new era, one of regular titles and perpetual competitiveness. The first championship might've been a fluke, but the second one in 2007 proved that the team was now a different creature than the one that dispensed regular allotments of disappointment for the better part of the prior century. Red Sox fans decisively cast off the underdog mantle and assumed the mindset of winners.

After that second title, we figured that a structure was in place that'd ensure the Sox were always in contention. The faces would change, but the strategy—spend big and don't get sentimental—would stay the same year after year. And the strategy is the macro issue, the overarching philosophy that transcends the day-to-day minutiae argued on sports radio. The Sox might have a problem filling the cleanup spot or the fifth starter position, but those day-to-day issues wouldn't derail the good ship Fenway from its inevitable voyage toward the postseason. Right?

Oh, if only.

For fans who remember the vivid failings of the Old Red Sox, the tail end of the 2011 regular season felt sickeningly familiar. Maybe it was Labor Day, or perhaps earlier, that some jaded pessimist in Red Sox Nation was the first to say aloud, "The only way the Red Sox miss the postseason is if they undergo the worst September collapse in baseball history." And if you vocalized that thought early in the month, you'd probably have been ridiculed by the new faithful. Yet The Collapse not only came to pass, with the Sox losing 20 games in a single month, it unfolded in the most gruesome way possible. On Sept. 28th, both the Red Sox and the Yankees were one strike away from winning their respective games, and either victory would've prolonged the Red Sox season. Both teams lost by one run. The Red Sox probed new depths of self-loathing by losing to the last-place Orioles. With two outs. In the bottom of the ninth.

After beginning the month with a nine-game lead in the wild card standings, the Sox were done. Oddly enough, a parallel September nightmare unfolded in Atlanta, where the Braves blew an eight-and-a-half game lead to forge their own massive implosion. (Is it relevant that the Atlanta Braves were once the Boston Braves? Yes, it is.) Clearly, September 2011 proved that the baseball spirits were angry with Beantown. And when the baseball gods become angry, the sacrifices start getting tossed into the volcano.

Francona's gone. Theo Epstein's gone. Wakefield and Varitek retired, Dice-K and Lackey had Tommy John surgery, Scutaro's tasting the Rockies and Papelbon's shipped off to Philly. This season dawns with a Red Sox team that's vastly different from its predecessor.

In recent years, April's uncertainties tended to be minor—is this team awesome, or really, really awesome? The 2012 Red Sox are more like the pre-2004 models, where success never felt preordained. This team's identity is, at the moment, defined by its uncertainties. Frankly, that's kind of refreshing. Here, then, are 10 questions that'll determine whether the 2012 Red Sox regain the mojo of the Cowboy Up era and help us forget the 2011 team's spiral into baseball infamy.

1 DO THE NEW BOBBY VALENTINE RED SOX HAVE ANY CHEMISTRY?

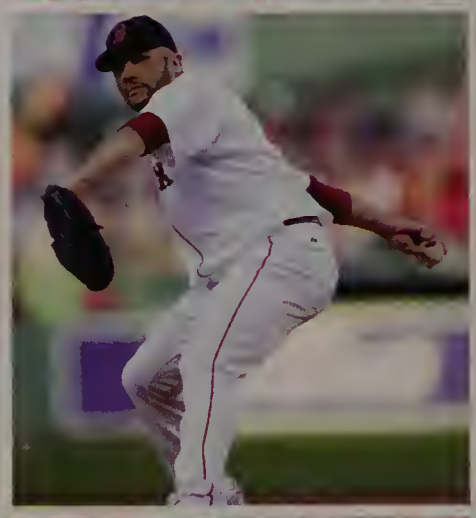
We're inclined to say yes, just based on the fact that the name Bobby Valentine sounds like a character on The Office. In reality, however, is that the new manager has his work cut out for him.

The good news is that Valentine inherits a core of solid veterans. Ortiz was an All-Star last year. Ellsbury was in the running for MVP. The Sox still have Pedroia, Youk, Gonzo, Beckett and the young hurlers. The trick will be integrating those old chums with the new guys, while tempering a clubhouse vibe that may have strayed into Lord of the Flies territory under the waning days of the Tito regime.

A brief recap of Red Sox discipline: When cornrowed pirate crooner Bronson Arroyo sailed his boat, The Nasty Hook, to friendlier waters a few years ago, we figured that maybe the off-field shenanigans were winding down. But last year we learned that any time is the right time for beer and chicken, as "off-field" evidently meant "at least 10 feet from the grass." It's not as if we need Steinbrenner-like dictates on personal grooming, but it appears the Sox's professionalism could be more major league and less Major League. If spring training is any measure, Valentine's bringing a new energy to the team—call it "loose but businesslike." We like it.

2 WHICH MIKE AVILES DO WE GET: .300 AVILES OR .220 AVILES?

Since it's potentially instructive to see what the opposing fan bases think of a player transaction, here's a sample of how Royals fans responded when the Kansas City Star reported that Aviles had been traded to the Red Sox.



- "You know, at one time, I liked Aviles, too. But that was back in '08, when he was driving the ball to all fields for extra base hits, he was running hard and playing an adequate shortstop. But then he had Tommy John surgery, and his arm has never been the same. He can't hit anything on the outer half of the plate. He can't knock down anything hit to him at third base. He looks like a matador out there. Olé!"
- "The Red Sox are apparently unaware of the fatal flaw in Mikey's swing. If the Royals pitch him breaking balls low and away, he'll never hit it out of the infield against us."
- "Wonder if Aviles knows anything about the Pawtucket area. He might want to get hold of a tourism pamphlet."

Well, Aviles hit .317 after joining the Sox last year. Sorry, Kansas City. Now let's hope he can maintain that pace for a whole season.

3 WHAT KIND OF CREATIVE TRADES CAN WE EXPECT OUT OF BEN CHERINGTON?

At this point, we really can't speculate about how aggressively Cherington will remix his roster with major trades (it might depend on how often he hangs out with Danny Ainge). But one thing's for sure: Ben Cherington has a big gorilla suit to fill. We're excited for some blockbuster deals from the new GM, with the Theo Epstein–for–Chris Carpenter deal as the template. In fact, trading non-players for players could become a Red Sox signature move. Look for a press conference this August announcing a blockbuster trade with the Rangers, netting the Red Sox Michael Young in exchange for Don Orsillo, Wally the Green Monster and an Aramark concessions employee to be named later.

Bailey's still a kid, and closing is a young man's game. You know, except for Rivera, who might be a vampire.

4 CAN BUCHHOLZ STAY HEALTHY?

There were a lot of factors to last year's headfirst cliff-dive onto the rocks of ignominy, so it's fruitless to hang the season on one particular issue. However, these are the facts: The Sox only needed to win one more game than they did. Clay Buchholz pitched his last game of the season on June 16. Is it reasonable to expect that over the remaining three and a half months, a healthy Buchholz would've added at least one more win to the overall tally? Well, duh.

We'd like to pretend that the Red Sox season doesn't hinge on Buchholz's back. Alas, it does. The 2011 Red Sox scored more runs than any other team in the majors, which points toward pitching depth as their biggest weakness. This year there was no blockbuster trade to conjure a stud starter, and we've got to hope Buchholz's spine stays healthy, so if you see him coming out of Shaw's carrying heavy bags of groceries, rush to his aid. We're all in this together.

5 IS ANDREW BAILEY THE NEXT JONATHAN PAPELBON OR THE NEXT ERIC GAGNE?

Closers not named Mariano Rivera have a definite shelf life with a single team. For the Sox, the career trajectories of Keith Foulke and Papelbon featured huge successes and popularity before leading to their exit out of town. Now Andrew Bailey steps into the crucible of Red Sox closer—the guy who gets some of the credit when things go right, and all of the blame when they go wrong.

There are several reasons for high expectations. Bailey's two All-Star appearances are nice, as is his impressive 2.07 lifetime E.R.A. But we're most excited that he was AL Rookie of the Year—not 10 years ago, not five years ago, but in 2009. Bailey's still a kid, and closing is a young man's game. You know, except for Rivera, who might be a vampire.

6 WHO'S THE FIFTH STARTER?

Is Alfredo Aceves the fifth starter or a bull-pen guy? On the upside, he does have the word "Ace" right there in his name. What about sinkerballer Aaron Cook, who won 16 games in 2008? Dare we suggest... Dice-K? He might be ready by the All-Star break. Let's just say that while the position remains unfilled, there's a lot of potential.

7 TO PUT THAT LAST QUESTION ANOTHER WAY: WHO'LL REPLACE TIM WAKEFIELD?

Answer: Tim Wakefield. Let's convince him to pull a Favre. He's a knuckleballer, for crying out loud. He should be able to pitch in the majors right until the day he retires to Boca Raton. Heck, by the time former flutterballer Charlie Hough retired, it wasn't because he couldn't pitch anymore. It was because day games were interfering with the early-bird special at Ponderosa Steakhouse.

8 WHO'S THE RIGHT-FIELDER?

To paraphrase Rick Pitino, Tom Brunansky's not walking through that door. So who's in right? Ryan Sweeney? Cody Ross or Darnell McDonald might also be possibilities, although those guys might end up playing left field, considering Carl Crawford's injury woes. Hey, remember the salad days when we all complained about Manny Ramirez and J.D. Drew?

9 SPEAKING OF THE OUTFIELD, WILL CARL CRAWFORD'S WRIST SURGERY RESTORE HIM TO HIS PRE-2011 AWESOMENESS?

At this point, that'd feel like finding a $50 bill on the ground (or for team ownership, like finding an extra $20 million lying around). Stranger things have happened. Remember how Nomar bounced back after his wrist surgery? OK, let's change the subject.

But just in case none of them pans out, we're sure Doug Mirabelli is still ready for a naked police-car ride to Fenway at a moment's notice.

10 THE SOX HAVE A BIG MUST-WIN GAME. WHO'S BEHIND THE PLATE?

With team captain, mentor and legendary A-Rod assaulter Jason Varitek retired, the Red Sox backstop position is getting rebooted. So is Jarrod Saltalamacchia the new go-to guy or does Kelly Shoppach get his starts in a platoon system? While Bobby Valentine will ponder the case of Salty v. Shoppy, the Sox have another interesting option in Ryan Lavarnway, the Yale philosophy major who came up from the minors to hit two home runs in the second-to-last game of 2011, keeping the Sox' season alive. But just in case none of them pans out, we're sure Doug Mirabelli is still ready for a naked police-car ride to Fenway at a moment's notice.

NOW, ONE FINAL EXISTENTIAL QUESTION: WILL THE COLLAPSE ULTIMATELY PROVE A BLESSING?

Perhaps what the Red Sox really needed was the brand of a crushing defeat that sounds a wakeup call, rather than the type of zombie victory that secures a playoff appearance but ensures that nothing really changes. With a new manager, a new GM and a slew of new players, this is as close to a rebirth as we'll get without tearing down Fenway. Let's play ball. ✖✖✖

EYE ON THE BALL

IT'S RARE WHEN A STADIUM is a bigger star than its players. To celebrate Fenway Park's 100th birthday, the Griffin Museum of Photography is throwing a exhibition titled, appropriately, Fenway Park, as a celebration of both the landmark and the neighborhood it defines. Trying to capture Fenway's unique personality as a historic urban ballpark, the show uses contemporary images, like this still life by David Levinthal, mixed alongside loans from public and private collections like the Baseball Hall of Fame and FDR Museum. And because everyone experiences the park differently, visitors are asked to share their own experiences after they've seen the exhibit. BOBBY MCGEE

Group Effort

Vaudeville showmanship has always been a primary component in the Lisps' live shows, but Futurity is the first time César Alvarez and his band have tried their hands at musical theater. The show has the plot of an epic romance and the feel of a jam session, incorporating spoken word with original songs to tell the story of a lovestruck Civil War soldier trying to build an artificial brain. Running through April 15 at Oberon, the club-meets-theater venue only adds to the fun.

Kiley Jacques

With Some Substance

Chemical Reactions British electro duo the Chemical Brothers have been spinning for sold-out crowds for two decades. With Don't Think, premiering at the Brattle Theatre on April 3, the innovative dance masters reconfigure the concert film through immersive cinematography. Recorded during the 2011 Fuji Rock Festival in Japan, director Adam Smith placed 20 cameras around the arena and stage to offer in-the-moment perspectives. Music fans have double the reason to dance, as the flick is screening after Swedish House Mafia's documentary, Take One. Kiley Jacques

Reviews by Sean Burns

A Thousand Words ★ Shot in 2008 and only released to cash in on a comeback that never really happened, Murphy's latest pile of kid-friendly treacle reteams him with Meet Dave director Brian Robbins for a fable about a literary agent named Jack cursed by a New Age guru. The overexplained premise states that Murphy has spiritually bonded with a tree in his backyard, which loses a leaf upon every word he utters. When the leaves all drop off, both Murphy and the tree will die. First of all, trees don't die when they lose their leaves, but why look for logic in a project that thinks we'll find any pleasure in denying this comic his distinctive voice? The only laughs arrive in a third-act veer into seriousness, including hallucinations of a crying young Jack chasing his deceased father through a field of wheat. It's like The Tree of Life brought to you by the makers of Norbit. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Being Flynn ★ ½ As the film is based on local author Nick Flynn's memoir Another Bullshit Night in Suck City, the title change alone shows how the story has been sanitized for mass audience approval. Adapted and directed by Paul Weitz, who made the promising About a Boy and has since devoted his career to backwash like Little Fockers and American Dreamz, Flynn stars wet noodle Paul Dano as a writer wrestling with substance abuse issues while trapped in the shadow of his alcoholic cab-driver dad (Robert De Niro). Any movie that puts De Niro behind the wheel of a taxi is asking for trouble, and as the actor delivers a rote collection of inconsistent behavioral tics, he fails to locate a character with any sense of tragic heft. Scrubbed clean of any regional color or naturalistic grit, the entire movie looks like it was shot on a Hollywood soundstage. I didn't buy it for a minute. (At Boston Common and Kendall Square.)

Casa de Mi Padre ★ ½ A five-minute Funny or Die sketch dragged out to feature length, Will Ferrell's latest bizarre project finds the comedian playing a lunkhead son of a Mexican rancher caught in the middle of a bordertown drug war. Borrowing the goofy conventions of '70s exploitation movies and telenovelas, the flick wallows in laughably phony background paintings, fake horses, overwrought music cues and deliberately bumpy camera movements. Shot entirely in Spanish, this science experiment costars Y Tu Mamá También sidekicks Gael García Bernal and Diego Luna as dueling drug kingpins, with Man on a Ledge scene-stealer Genesis Rodriguez as the woman making everybody crazy. I suppose director Matt Piedmont deserves credit for pulling off such an elaborate stunt, but exactly how long are we supposed to find it amusing? It doesn't have enough jokes to work as a parody, yet the movie is far too busy winking at the audience to become interesting on its own goofy terms. The whole thing just kind of sits there. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Friends With Kids ★★ This gimmicky rom-com tries hard to trumpet its bold irreverence but settles for such boring plot mechanics and conventional Hollywood morality that it might as well star Katherine Heigl. Parks and Recreation's Adam Scott and writer/director/producer Jennifer Westfeldt are the kind of friends who finish each other's sentences and make bawdy jokes about terminal illness and their failed relationships. Naturally, they decide to have a baby together for reasons that only make sense according to a screenwriter's manual. The two circle their way around a great deal of tortured logic before eventually arriving at the absurd conclusion that they'll remain friends and split custody with no complications. How's that work? Just once I'd like to see a movie in which a man and a woman can be platonic friends without hooking up. Wasting a killer supporting cast borrowed from Bridesmaids, it's a movie about Scott and Westfelt taking a torturously long time to finally figure out that they belong together. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Hugo ★★★★ Leave it to Martin Scorsese to direct a children's adventure about the importance of film preservation. Working from Brian Selznick's book, The Invention of Hugo Cabret, this miracle of a movie follows the title orphan (Asa Butterfield) as he hides out in a Parisian train station in the 1930s, winding the clocks and dodging a pratfall-riddled rent-a-cop (Sacha Baron Cohen). Meanwhile, a grumpy shopkeeper (Ben Kingsley) just might have a secret of his own. Hugo takes a sharp turn into a voluptuously helmed cinema history lesson that should be taught in schools. Scorsese employs cutting-edge digital 3-D technologies for this love letter to forgotten films, embracing the exploratory spirit of the medium's original pioneers. Hugo reminded me why I fell in love with movies in the first place. (At Fresh Pond, West Newton Cinema and in the suburbs.)

Jeff, Who Lives at Home ★ ½ The DIY pleasantness of directors Jay and Mark Duplass plays just fine on the indie -festival circuit, where slight narratives and a lack of ambition can coast on microbudgeted charm. But in a multiplex production with a cast stocked with stars, the brothers' slacker ethos just translates as lazy. Jason Segel stars as the titular 30-year-old stoner pondering questions of the universe in his mother's basement, while Ed Helms grates as his tacky brother who's worried that his wife (Judy Greer) might be cheating. In a completely disconnected thread, Susan Sarandon turns up as their cubicle-drone mother who's intrigued by the attentions of a secret admirer at the office. Not much at all happens in this picture, which subsists for 90 minutes on improvisation and some shoddy camerawork. The Duplass trademark is to constantly flick the zoom lens for no discernible reason, as if frantically signaling that they're not ready for prime time. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

John Carter ★ ½ Disney's $250-million megaflop has already earned a place in the history books as a cautionary tale in confounding potential audiences with misguided marketing, and the studio's thuggish attitude toward members of the press stands as a manual on how to lose friends and alienate people. But what about the movie itself? As an apologist for many a blockbuster bomb, I'd love to be able to report that this wounded baby bird was mishandled by executives. Alas, it's dreadful. Based on Edgar Rice Burroughs' 1917 novel, A Princess of Mars, which was already ransacked by Star Wars and Avatar, John Carter is a talky hodgepodge of overfamiliar elements. Friday Night Lights' Taylor Kitsch tamps down any semblance of charisma, starring as a haunted Civil War vet who becomes an unlikely savior during a Red Planet war. Bogged down with narrative dead ends and goofy names, the movie is so busy trying to set up sequels that it forgets to tell a story of its own. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Project X ★ ½ Shouldn't the found-footage/fake-documentary fad be over by now? Or is it just easier for lazy filmmakers who don't bother planning shots to make a movie on shaky equipment? Whatever the case, this Cloverfield of teenage sex comedies doubles down on the stale wild party clichés and tries passing them off as something new thanks to an overdose of amateur Flip cam footage. Three high-school nerds decide to throw a rager and, as tends to happen when parents are out of town, the guest list quickly blossoms out of control. So we've got one boozy, sex-seeking night spent with a mousy kid and his short sidekick, along with a mystical geek rounding out the trio. Sound familiar yet? Project X shamelessly rips so many pages from the script of Superbad that Seth Rogen and Evan Goldberg have grounds for a lawsuit. At the very least, costar Oliver Cooper should consider sending Jonah Hill a letter of apology. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

This Means War ★ This is the most vile romantic comedy in years, and that's saying something considering the dregs of this genre. Populated by expensive gadgets and sociopaths, the film stars Reese Witherspoon as a grown woman who carries on like a teenage girl, especially when finding herself simultaneously courted by two bro-mantic CIA agents (Chris Pine and Tom Hardy). Instead of tracking down Til Schweiger's ideology-deficient terrorist, who's just arrived in L.A. seeking vengeance, these two closet cases use our nation's chilling surveillance techniques to spy on each other during dates, sabotaging Witherspoon's romantic advances. She's a horrible liar, and they're both wasting taxpayer dollars filming each other having sex. Occasionally the haggard Chelsea Handler stops the movie to give a lecture about how men's hands indicate penis size. I was rooting for the terrorist. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Tinker Tailor Soldier Spy ★★ Let the Right One In director Tomas Alfredson's stagnant adaptation of John le Carré's spy novel revels in the source material's status as the anti-Bond thriller. Set in a 1973 rife with bad sideburns and unflattering eyeglasses, it's espionage full of ugly men toting manila folders and making insinuations in rooms so smoky that even the movie theater winds up with nicotine stains on its walls. Something very bad happened in Budapest, and Gary Oldman's George Smiley is eventually coaxed from retirement to ferret out a mole within the British secret service. Chockablock with great English character actors aching for a paycheck now that the Harry Potter series is over, Tinker Tailor fusses with a fractured time line, obscuring crucial information and priding itself on keeping the audience as far away from the plot as possible. This is an expertly mounted, enervating slog. (At West Newton Cinema and in the suburbs.)

We Need to Talk About Kevin ★★★★ Recalling the parental fearfulness of Eraserhead, director Lynne Ramsay's third feature is an outrageous provocation. Brutal, hilarious and incredibly sad, its viewers are either going to love it or despise it. Either way, here's a movie worth arguing about. Tilda Swinton, that art-house icon with the sharp angles and Ziggy Stardust aura, stars as a mom whose accidental pregnancy crushed her globe-trotting dreams, so her child turns into a psychopathic stand-in for her guilt-ridden selfishness and regret. Dizzily skipping back and forth over two decades, Ramsay composes images in fragmented waves, as stray bits of scenes accumulate over time. Something very bad has happened, but it's going to take us a little while to find out exactly what. Seamus McGarvey's gorgeous cinematography amplifies the sterility of a suburban landscape that's punctuated by blindingly bright reds. Everything from tomato soup cans, to clock radios, to jelly sandwiches act as harbingers of doom. This is bravura filmmaking. We're not supposed to talk about a lot of the ugly feelings Kevin stirs up, but maybe we should. (At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

Music Edited by Lindsey Canant

Andrew DeSantis

He's Been Framed

Loney Ranger Swedish soul-folk sensation, Loney, Dear began his career humbly, recording on CD-Rs in his parents' basement. Yet the singer/songwriter (real name: Emil Svanängen) emerged on the music scene with a deeply layered sound. Lulling saxophones, flutes and oboes have lured flocks of listeners. Catch his homegrown sub-pop on April 1 at Paradise Rock Club. Bobby McGee

Pop Goes the Easel

Color Commentator

Realism reaches imaginative heights in Robert C. Jackson's latest exhibit. Returning to the Arden Gallery for an eighth time, Jackson showcases his wit and humor with a selection of satirical still lifes. Colorful whimsy packs the white gallery walls as balloon animals, crates, fruits and Oreos form playful commentary on American life. Pop by to view the goofy-goes-insightful antics April 3-28.

Power Play

War and Peace

Rachel Maddow is known for her direct and pointed political views, and in Drift, she makes a case against American militarism. At First Parish Cambridge, Maddow discusses the changing public opinion about international conflict. Her theory is that as we move away from the Founding Fathers' ideals, conflict becomes more of a norm. An entire country goes to war, but very few individuals actually have a say. Hear her take on the matter on April 1.

Unlike the rest of your friends, we want to see the photos from your next trip. Where did you take us? Send us a picture of you or a buddy, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you went. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed IMPROPER Sightings.

Marjie and Bob Dennis visited London's Westminster Abbey, where England's royalty go for weddings, funerals and tips from our Spring Fashion issue.

Merri, Joe and Spencer Rubin (Improper senior account executive Carly Rubin's family) conched out in Key West, Fla.

Charles Talanian, Barbara Hatzmann and Matt Tatro visited Stocking Island in the Bahamas, where all roads lead to a Rum Swizzle.

Actor/comedian Kev Orkian had one too many Skinnygirl margaritas and got a little handsy with Bethenny Frankel.

RESTAURANTS

ABE & LOUIE'S [793 Boylston Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-536-6300, abeandlouies.com] Abe & Louie's is the quintessential American steakhouse, serving prime cuts of corn fed, Midwestern beef, fresh seafood and garden produce. Steaks are aged on the bone for six weeks to ensure maximum flavor. Signature dishes include the bone-in filet mignon, NY sirloin and swordfish chop. With its high quality food, outstanding service and classic interiors, this award-winning restaurant has consistently remained a Boston favorite since its debut in 1998.

BISTRO DU MIDI [272 Boylston Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-426-7878, bistrodumidi.com] Bistro du Midi showcases authentic Provencal cuisine in a warm, welcoming, and beautiful setting. Inspired by the ingredients and culinary techniques of the Midi region in France, Executive Chef, Robert Sisca presents modern, ingredient-driven creations that are at once refined and approachable. From a carefully conceived charcuterie selection to the freshest seafood, meats and vegetables, Bistro du Midi brings the simple, clean and bold flavors of Provence to Boston.

JOE'S AMERICAN BAR & GRILL [9 locations in the Boston greater area, visit joesamerican.com] Joe's serves classic American comfort food in a comfortable setting, making it a local favorite for lunch, dinner, weekend brunch or take-out. Everything is made in-house, from the famous clam chowder to their juicy burgers or fall-off-the bone ribs. With carved wood, stained glass and vintage lighting, Joe's is reminiscent of your favorite New England watering hole. Try the bloody mary or one of their local beers on tap.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

THE PURPLE SHAMROCK [1 Union Street, Boston, 617-227-2060, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the freedom trail across from Boston City Hall on Union Street. The Purple Shamrock is the perfect place to stop by and have a bite to eat. The fare is composed of New England specialties with burgers, sandwiches, hearty pastas, fresh seafood, tender steaks and other great favorites. Let's not forget their infamous Shamrock Brunch served every Saturday and Sunday that is often paired with live music. After dark, The Purple Shamrock has nightly entertainment with a mix of live music, karaoke and DJ's. At The Purple Shamrock there is something for everyone.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post- game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

the IMPROPER

On the Town!

Boston's finest restaurants and clubs

JOSE MCINTYRE'S [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Jose McIntyre's is located across from the Aquarium on Milk Street. This is Boston's only Mexican-Irish restaurant and bar. For close to two decades Jose's has been an institution with the after work and late night party crowds. If the Dos Equis man is the world's most interesting man, Jose McIntyre is the world's most entertaining. Come experience the most unique venue in Boston. With 5 rooms, 3 bars, 2 floors and a game room; José is the perfect place to unwind with co-workers or host a celebration.

BARS & CLUBS

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 Dartmouth Street, Boston, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

Beer Specialty

BRUNCH

THE BILTMORE BAR & GRILL [1205 Chestnut Street, Newton, 617-527-2550, thebiltmoregrill.com] Opened at the start of Prohibition, the Biltmore started out as a speakeasy and has been a neighborhood favorite in Newton's historic Upper Falls ever since. Brunch is served Saturday, Sunday and Monday holidays featuring creative menu items such as Huevos Tacos, Sausage Fritter Sandwich and Biltmore's famous Chicken & Waffles. Brunch libations such as the Danish Bloody Mary and Red Beer (The Cure!) help ease your way into the day.

LOCAL 149 [149 P Street, South Boston, 617-269-0900, local149.com] A neighborhood joint in South Boston's Citypoint, Local 149 offers historic roots and lots of heart & soul. Brunch is served Saturdays and Sundays featuring new classics from Chef Leah DuBois such as "Toast To Life and Bacon" and the "Lobster MacMuffin". 'Spicy Pimento Cheese Fries' and 'Dixie Chicken" start the day right washed down with a Bucket of High Life ponies or the $5 Milkshake.

MOOO.... [15 Beacon Street, Boston, 617-670-2515, mooorestaurant.com] In the shadow of Beacon Hill's lofty State House and within the grandeur of the XV Beacon Hotel is MOOO...., a steakhouse extraordin-aire. Chef David Hutton offers a modern approach of fine selected meat and seafood dishes. Breakfast and lunch weekdays, dinner daily, Sunday brunch, bar and lounge. An impressive Wine Cellar and discreet Parlor Suites are the solution to successful business entertaining and private dining. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] "Beer's not just for breakfast anymore." PARDON MY FRENCH

We'll Always Have Michigan

Fun fact: For the French, one of the top U.S. tourist destinations is Detroit, which they view as the American equivalent of Pompeii or the Parthenon—a ruin worth preserving as a monument to industrial and cultural heritage.

Taking a page out of the Save Venice playbook, the French Library and Cultural Center hosted a Motor City–themed evening in its Back Bay townhouse, where a cherry '57 Chevy was parked out front and Motown music kept everyone on the dance floor.

Save Detroit attracted the likes of Gallic funboy Eric Jausseran and his most amusing ami, Andy Levine, bubbly blonde Kelly Boullet and her other half, Nicolas, the ethereally beautiful Linda Henry and her husband, John, Camilla de Braganca (on a visit home from her semester abroad in Buenos Aires), WGBH-TV Channel 2 cutie Jared Bowen, the improbably tall and impossibly talented Daren Bascombe, and others of their rarefied ilk.

Aretha Franklin performed during dinner, where the tables were decorated with cans of Quaker State and assorted automotive parts, and the evening's toast was delivered in French, so I didn't understand a word of it.

Nevertheless, it was charmant to the nth degree.

The evening's most arch remark: A woman wearing a particularly low-cut gown looked at a Beacon Hill matron giving her the fish-eye and said, "I didn't get these so that no one could see them."

Hole in One

Animal lovers and putt-putt aficionados alike converged on The Country Club in Chestnut Hill for the Caddy Bitches Golf Tournament to benefit the MSPCA.

Players completed 18 holes despite the relentless drizzle, and among the spectators who decided "Bad hair day be damned!" were the flawless Jessica Nigrelli, animal lover Cokie Perry and her other half, Lee, yummy mummies Lori Sidman and Sarah Monaco, real estate scion Bob Beal, the delightful Susan Schechter, and the delightfully named Bebe Wunderlich, to name a few.

Following the tournament, which was won by Senator Scott Brown and his Wheaton terrier, cocktails and dog biscuits were served in the clubhouse, prompting one guest to remark, "The dog treats look tastier than the hors d'oeuvres."

Dana Duong and Daren Bascome at Save Detroit

Joshua Janson at Saks in the City

Tonya Chen Mezrich and Michael De Paulo at Saks in the City

Tony Corey and CJ Menard at the Gay Men's Domestic Violence Project's Fight Night

Heather Golleary and Jessica Nigrelli at the Caddy Bitches Golf Tournament

Andy Levine and Esther Kim at Save Detroit

But the Shoes Aren't Bad

It was anything but your run-of-the-mill fundraiser when the Gay Men's Domestic Violence Project hosted Fight Night at Gold's Gym in Medford.

Needless to say, there were cocktails and canapés, and the crowd was better dressed than the venue's regular denizens. Dashing and debonair types in attendance included real estate stud muffin Ricardo Rodriguez and his impish husband, Michael Kelley, Boston's unofficial fairy godfather Harry Collings, dashing tie designer Tony Corey and his suave other half, CJ Menard, 28 Degrees owner Bill Emery, WCVB-TV Channel 5 heartthrob David Brown, and so on and so forth.

Besides watching two putatively straight pugilists beating the stuffing out of each other, guests could bid on such silent auction items as a walk-on role on How I Met Your Mother and a vintage Duke Nukem action figure whose motto was: "Hold my beer while I do your girlfriend."

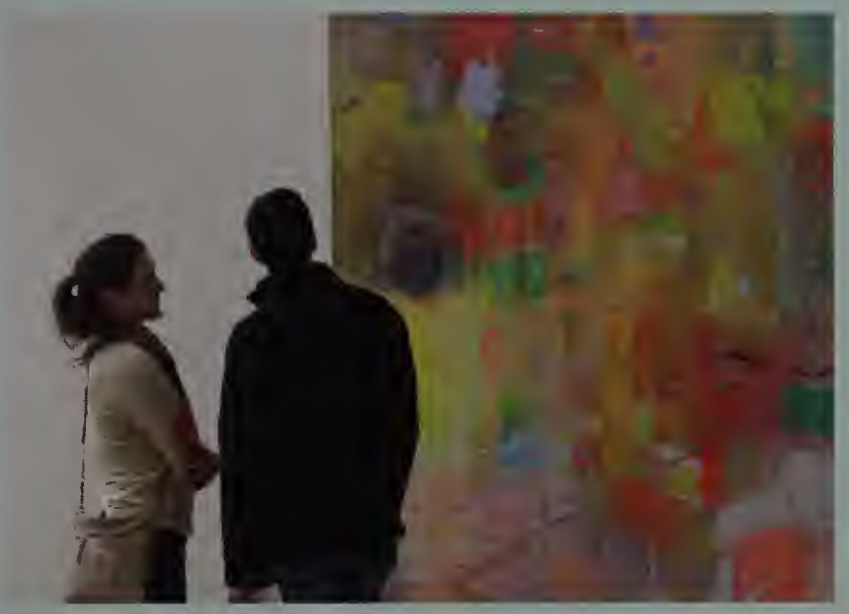
However, the evening's most amusing remark came from the man who said, "Boxing might be butch, but I wouldn't be caught dead in satin shorts."

I Wonder What the Other 99 Percent Are Doing Right Now

Saks in the City is an annual shopping event/fund-raiser that attracts the rabidly fashion-conscious, and this year, one percent of all sales benefitted the Occupy movement.

Seen snatching up pairs of Manolos and the latest from Prada were a bevy of beauties that included babe-a-licious blonde Ashley Bernon and her lapdog, Joshua Janson, fashionistas Laura Baldini and Evelyn Peralta, the shoe-obsessed Tonya Chen Mezrich, blonde sexbomb Julia Owens, activist and writer Alex Pearlman, stunning brunette Julie Hume Gordon, and the rest of the city's pre-facelift socialites.

Two of them wound up in a tussle over a crocodile Birkin bag, and they agreed to settle it with a coin toss, but neither of them could find one.



"Change?" someone asked, rather cluelessly. "Isn't that what people are always asking me to give them?"

Oh, and by the way... April Fool's. ×××

The IMPROPER

Questionable Grounds

Human beings, like grapes, have terroir. Depending on where you've rooted, you might take on notes of acidity, earthiness or peach. Some people hang in the sun and swell with sugary optimism. Others sprout fungus. No matter your varietal, though, it's your underlying soil that determines whether—once life crushes you, douses you in sulfites and drinks you to the lees—you leave behind a perfumed finish and a joyful intoxication, or whether you're spat into a bucket awash in herpes. Environment counts.

Adam DeTour

So it's very important to mold your home into a happy place. For example, Mad King Ludwig liked Wagner operas so much, he built himself a castle that looks like a backdrop to Lohengrin, complete with a concert space so he'd never have to miss a night of noisy, crippling boredom. But while most of us lack the renovations budget of a 19th-century Bavarian lunatic, you can always cut corners. Love the hunting-lodge aesthetic but can't pay for a real moosehead? Mount the head of a jumbo shrimp on a nail. Always dreamed of climbing Mount Everest? Get a snow globe. Want to recreate the atmosphere of the crematorium of Moloch but can't afford a huge demonic statue, stained with the blood of innocents? Hang a snapshot of the Koch brothers. Personally, it's a good thing I enjoy clean, modernist lines. Makes not owning any furniture a lot more palatable.

Alternately, you could forget decorating your house and spend the money on a case of Bordeaux.

We can tell our coffee is slow-roasted to perfection just by the way it sounds.

As a coffee bean roasts, it makes popping sounds. A Tully's® Roaster is expertly trained to adjust the heat according to these sounds during our unique slow-roasting process. A process that's as much handcrafted as it is ear-reliant. It gives our coffees the richest, fullest flavors. And it's why we say, the slower the roast, the better the cup.

MASS. APPEAL

WITH TAILWINDS AND a substantial downhill trend, official world records can't be set at the Boston Marathon. Instead, our signature race is often viewed as an event where world-class runners can simply post staggering times, collect hefty checks and soak in the cheers of a beer-steeped crowd. However, "Many of the runners will tell you it's one of the most challenging courses because of that downhill element," says four-time winner Bill Rodgers. Unlike Berlin, London, Chicago and other modern, coddling tracks built for speed, Boston is a course for delivering pain, where the deep agony of Heartbreak Hill is felt in the ball and socket joints. "All these great runners come here not to run fast; they come here because of the history," explains Rodgers. "I've run marathons on five continents and 60 in all, but Boston is the granddaddy."

Roe House

T.W. Food's latest menu is already ripe with spring produce, but executive chef Tim Wiechmann and his team can't resist egging on the season. Grounding the dish with house-cured bacon cubes, they pair a slow-scrambled farm egg—so creamy it arrives in a martini glass for better scoopability—with shad roe for a playful egg-on-egg confection. There's no visible trace of the pink, liverish roe, though; the fleeting New England delicacy blends into the scramble so that all you notice is a subtly rich nip of brine.

HOMEMADE TERRARIUMS, EXPLAINED

An easy way to add a touch of spring to your home is with a terrarium. This miniature ecosystem updates the humdrum potted plant, and requires watering just once a week (at the most). According to terrarium-builder Ann Marie Waldsmith of Mahoney Garden in Brighton, you should start with a simple glass container—anything from an old fish bowl to a mason jar will do. Layer gravel, horticultural charcoal and light potting mix or sphagnum moss on the bottom. Add small, colorful plants that can coexist peacefully; ferns, rex begonias and desert plants are your best bet for a first attempt. Lastly, decorate the space with baubles, stones, pinecones, votive idols or tiny garden gnomes. And, if it all dies, don't be discouraged, advises Waldsmith. "Lots of trial and error is necessary, and if one plant fails, you can always swap it out."

Ohana serves up something new in Gloucester.

WITH HOTSPOTS like Latitude 43 and the Franklin Café, Gloucester established its credibility beyond fried clams. Chef Enx Dadulas plans to raise the gastronomic profile of Cape Ann even more when he debuts Ohana in early May. Dadulas, a former protégé of James-Beard-Award-winning Roy Yamaguchi (of Top Chef Masters), is a master of Hawaiian fusion cuisine.

He's honed his style, one he describes as "new American: Asian spice, with French and Italian techniques," with stints at B&G Oysters, Brasserie Jo and, most recently, L'Andana. Expect dishes like Asian five-spiced monkfish "osso buco" with puréed edamame, lomi salmon and kimchee beurre blanc, or starters like roasted quail with Okinawan potato puree, pear-saffron chutney and soy honey.

CHEF RACHEL KLEIN has plenty of experience tackling hotel dining, but with her move from the Seaport Boston Hotel to the Mandarin Oriental, Boston, Klein says running the kitchen at Asana will take some getting used to. "It's a big animal," she says. So big, in fact, that Klein can't define the new menu she'll introduce at Asana in late spring. Here's a hint, though: The dishes will draw more from her tenure at Om than her time at Aura, and she's eagerly anticipating the arrival of ingredients such as peas and baby fennel.

CO-OWNER BRAD FREDERICKS says the Paul Sussman–helmed Back Deck will open at the corner of West and Washington Streets in early May, "pending no surprises."

MERRY MAKING

Michael Schlow has plenty of reasons to smile lately. He's spent the past year riding high on the success of Tico, he's newly engaged, and he can hardly contain his excitement for his latest venture, the appropriately named Happy's Bar + Kitchen, a chef's spin on the classic American diner.

The restaurant, opening in late April, is a departure for Schlow, who's known for his haute cuisine at Via Matta and Radius. It's one he's been planning for a long time. "The idea is to feature dishes I couldn't include on the menus in my other restaurants," he says. "People love spaghetti and meatballs, but I can't do spaghetti and meatballs at Via Matta. Here, there are no rules."

He's enjoying his freedom. The opening menu features dishes like "International, Nondenominational, Bipartisan Chicken Soup," which blends matzo balls with Sardinian fregula and basmati rice. There's a rotating selection of grown-up TV dinners and blue plate specials—Tuesdays, for example, deliver one-pound meatballs, served with spaghetti and garlic bread. "Heads are going to turn when it goes by," Schlow laughs.

Like the menu, the decor is noisy and attention-seeking while remaining comfortable, even disarming. Walls are streaked with neon graffiti or covered with flattened beer caps, and the lounge is stocked with custom furniture that only Archie Bunker could love. "Everybody has some aunt who has a really ugly chair in her living room, but it's the best chair," says Schlow. "I wanted that."

If Schlow's other outposts aim for culinary greatness, Happy's seems content settling into the Fenway as a neighborhood hangout. "If you want to come here and just have a beer, I'm cool with that," he says. "I think you'll probably end up wanting to eat, though."

DARK LADY

Electro-pop star Dev performs at the Middle East Downstairs on April 16.

How are you balancing being a new mom, releasing an album and going on tour?
I guess it's kind of hard, but my fiancé helps me so much, and we're really fortunate that our schedules work to our benefit and we can bring our baby on the road. She was actually with me when I was hosting the Woodies at South by Southwest. She was in my trailer. We made it a family trip, which is rad. I'm planning to bring her along on tour.

Hasn't it taken a toll on your ability to party?
I had to find out the hard way that partying all night and drinking random Champagne until 6 am is not the way my life can function. Before I even found out I was pregnant, I had been sober for a couple months. I couldn't make my flights; I couldn't do interviews. At the end of the day, you want to represent yourself and your work really well. Even though I do love to drink and have a good time, going home and sleeping is really important to me.

What do you hope your daughter will learn from the pop-star life?
That she can do whatever she sets her mind to, and it's really cool to be an individual and to not be scared to do stuff and to be a strong woman. I want her to do whatever the f she wants. I just hope she grows up to be a bad b*.

What do you say to people who think that dance music lacks substance?
That's their own opinion, and that's fine. The music process going into making an electronic, or whatever, even a rap song, is just as difficult as anything else. I don't think people, including some of my close friends, really get that.

Thoughts on comparisons drawn between you and other musicians?
The music that my music is rooted from is a lot different than the music that most electronic artists are recording, whether it's when I'm singing over an acoustic guitar or the hip-hop beats that are based under the song. On my album, I have all these different genres, but it's still very cohesive. That's what makes me stick out.

Tech Question Corner

Q: My daughter dropped my iPad and cracked the screen, what do I do?

A: Cracked and broken devices happen very frequently this day in age and can be very expensive to replace. This is why we always recommend fixing it. There are specialty shops that can fix almost any problem, typically, while you wait. They specialize in fixing anything from broken glass to water damage. We are techies who feel that these devices still have a lot of life left in them and stay up with today's technology. The best way to keep hardware out of landfills is to keep it running longer. Toxic electronic waste is a global problem that we all need to pitch in to solve. Repairing electronics saves you money and helps save the environment.

Drink of the Moment

FIT TO PRINT

NAME: Printer's Punch.

PRICE: $10.

INGREDIENTS: Bulleit Bourbon, Sailor Jerry rum, the Kraken Black Spiced Rum, Matilde Péche Liqueur, fresh-squeezed citrus juices and vinho verde.

TASTING NOTES: Mercifully, Printer's Punch skews more freshly sour than cloyingly sweet. The addition of bourbon adds vanilla notes, while Péche Liqueur rounds out the flavor. A vinho verde float adds an unexpected frizzante zing.

BEHIND THE NAME: The restaurant, First Printer, is on the site of America's first printing press.

GEOGRAPHY: Former Charleston-resident general manager Emily Martin wanted an easy-sipping Planter's Punch spin-off on the menu to remind her of home. Though First Printer's menu is rooted in New England seafood, the cocktail is a nice complement to a smattering of Southern fare like the Swamp Bowl ($12)—a mix of fried gator, frogs' legs and steamed mudbugs.

BY THE BOOK?: Though the published history of Planter's Punch dates back to (at least) the turn of the century, cocktailers can't agree on a single classic recipe.

SEASONALITY: Perhaps due to its roots in Jamaica and the South, Planter's Punch is typically associated with porch-side sipping or summer backyard bashes. Having adopted it as one of their signature cocktails, First Printer anticipates year-round demand for this twist on the Caribbean classic.

SUCKER PUNCH: Liquors in this ample-sized glass may be stiffer than they appear. The boozy beverage is easy going down, but may cause problems when standing up.

DRESS TO IM-PRESS: Customers come wearing everything from formalwear to athletic attire. Martin describes the clientele as decked in "boots and suits."

Beauty

Laser Tagged

Last month, I finally realized that spot concealer is no match for acne's devil-child: residual redness. I'd been painstakingly applying dots of makeup to my face every morning. Who has that kind of time? Seurat, that's who. Oils, washes, enough! The time had come for lasers.

After a consultation ($75) at Boston University Cosmetic & Laser Center with Dr. Emmy Graber, I learned that the technical term for the eyesore is actually hyperpigmentation and the VBeam is its nemesis. The VBeam (or pulsed dye laser) is a specific wavelength of light (595 nanometers) that heats the hemoglobin and eventually leads to destruction of the blood vessels. Translation: Strap on some protective eyewear and sit down while two doctors play Space Invaders on your face.

I reclined blindly in a large chair, my eyes reduced to two black, goggled saucers. Lightning-bolt flashes crashed wildly into my peripheral vision, making me feel like Frankenstein's monster. But the process isn't painful, and with same-day treatment and assistance of a resident physician, it isn't expensive either ($275).

And it works. The marks on my skin are manifestly lighter. Time to trade in your neo-impressionist morning ritual for a sci-fi day at the doctor's office.

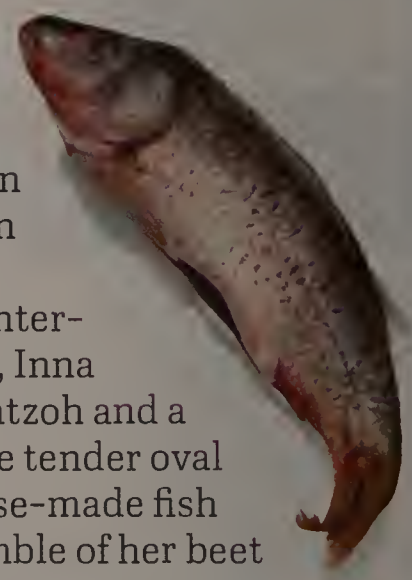
Dry In

Riesling is among the least understood grape varieties in the wine world. Of all the important white grapes it has to be the most versatile, stylistically and in terms of food compatibility. Now that riesling's finally come into its own commercially, people are realizing it's not always sweet. Rieslings come in all sizes and shapes; some of the most compelling for everyday drinking taste completely dry.

Dry styles were pioneered in Alsace in northeastern France, but riesling can be produced without appreciable sugar anywhere the grape grows. It thrives in a cool, sunny climate that extends the harvest into autumn, so that the varietal's delicate flavors and aromas can fully develop. The following examples are right in step with the seasonal turn toward lighter, fresher eating.

Lucien Albrecht "Réserve" Riesling Alsace, 2009 ($17, Federal Wine & Spirits, Boston) Light-medium straw in color, this wine has a delicate apple and peach aroma that's clean and refreshing. The year 2009 was unusually ripe in Alsace, as well as in most of the rest of France. The flavors are juicy and mellow, with soft fruity lemon and lime accents. Medium in body, this bone-dry wine finishes with a hint of earthy spice. It's got the complete package: aroma, structure, fruit and a lingering aftertaste. A great aperitif on a warm sunny day, or try it with grilled shrimp and rice.

Hermann J. Wiemer "Dry" Riesling Finger Lakes, 2010 ($22, Winestone, Chestnut Hill) Hands down the best producer in upstate New York (and to my taste the entire East Coast), Wiemer fashions a tropically scented, orange and apricot-like riesling that actually has a touch of discernible sugar. Not sweet enough to register when the wine is served very cold, this is extremely well-balanced and has a hint of the petrol notes that some riesling lovers prize. It's very tart, with medium body and a peach-pit spiciness in the finish. Enjoy with coconut- or curry-flavored Thai dishes.



Kuentz-Bas Riesling "Tradition" Alsace, 2009 ($20, Marty's, Newton) Kuentz-Bas is one of the many practicing "biodynamic" estate bottlers in Alsace that avoids chemical treatments and has worked hard to recreate the natural micro-organic life in its soil. Much more floral in aroma than the Albrecht, with fresh herbs, hay, apple blossom and honeysuckle scents, this is equally dry, but lower key in flavor. Acids are dramatic, with crisp, tart citrus and dramatic saline mineral accents. This is what I call a riesling for sauvignon blanc lovers. Beautiful with fresh shellfish.

Gefilte Fishing

No wonder gefilte fish gets a bad rap. The Passover staple has a reputation as dense, slimy seafood loaves swimming in jars of gelatinous liquid, but mother-son team Inna and Alex Khitrik of Newton Centre's Inna's Kitchen offer a fresher interpretation. Following her family's recipe, Inna grinds carp fillets with onion, a little matzoh and a touch of sugar. Then she hand-forms the tender oval cakes and gently poaches them in a house-made fish broth. And don't forget to pick up a thimble of her beet horseradish.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES

Spring marks a new astrological calendar and spruced-up homes and wardrobes. Accent these clean slates with bold pops of color associated with the season's zodiac—citrine (airy Gemini), emerald (earthy Taurus), garnet (fiery Aries) and smoky gray (water sign Cancer)—for a divine look that's aligned with the stars.

WORDS OF WISDOM

Practical life and investment advice from a guy who knows

ETERNALLY OPTIMISTIC, wry and deft at surmounting obstacles, John D. Spooner delivers letters of advice to his grandchildren, Alyssa and Wesley. They're about finances and life, with each ending on a punch-line of wisdom.

As an investment adviser watching over $1 billion in assets, Spooner believes in human connections and lifelong friendships—the sort that circulate warmth into the coldness of the corporate world (he tellingly prefers notes written on touchable paper). Though sunny about money, he maintains a skeptical distance and a Bogartian tilt of the head as he looks askance at excesses in the cyclical, often bipolar world of markets. Spooner brings his novelist's eyes, ears and neurons to bear on colorful characters, giving both celebration and warning to his grandchildren about what the buck can and can't do. Indeed, here's a man who's schmoozed with Mel Brooks, "whizzed" with Hemingway and told off Alan Greenspan.

No One Ever Told Us That
by John D. Spooner

Spooner is a columnist for The Improper.

His tone is cheery. ("'Please tell Mrs. Parsons it's John Spooner, and I'm calling about her emotional future.' I always get a call back!") He cautions about commodities and debt and the trickiness of real estate. "Trust, but verify" is one bit of advice. Another is more elastic: "Now's the time for you to take chances in life." ✖✖✖

FROM PAGE 164: "But he's so smart," Danaher said. "He even told me that his company stationery is buff and blue. That his research shows those colors are the easiest on the eyes. And he went to our college."

"The Unabomber went to our college," I answered. "You go to a wonderful school. It doesn't mean you're not nuts. Or dishonest."

LIFE ON THE STREET

Baltimore is an unexpectedly entertaining weekend destination.

POE HOUSE Come for "The Raven" references, stay for the crab dip.

PROPOSE A VACATION TO Baltimore, and Bostonians will likely scoff. Why not go to the Yukon for a tan? Or lose weight on a bacon-doughnut diet? Makes about as much sense as going to Baltimore for fun.

Except Baltimore, nowadays, is very much fun, indeed.

"Everyone thinks about Baltimore and Homicide: Life on the Street and The Wire," said Barry Werner, co-owner of Scarborough Fair, a cozy bed and breakfast on Federal Hill. "It's more Ace of Cakes."

The flagship room of the Scarborough is the Edgar Allan Poe suite, with gray walls, a gothic-style fireplace, a vase full of black feathers and a bust of Pallas Athena (recall how the raven ominously perches on a statue of the Greek goddess in the famous poem). From Ravens football to purple Raven Cab Co. taxis, Poe references are everywhere in "the City That Reads," a motto once painted on bus benches.

Beyond the personal touches in the rooms, Werner serves up exceptional breakfast dishes like ricotta blueberry pancakes, artichoke soufflé, sweet corn and tomatoes, and house-made cheese Danishes. It makes for a solid base for exploring the neighborhood by foot.

Fifteen years ago, Federal Hill was down at the heel. Now, doe-eyed children play in the streets, yuppies walk with Labrador retrievers and homeowners have erected wooden decks on their row-house rooftops to view the city's skyline and Inner Harbor.

An hour-long stroll through the colonial-era, tree-lined streets of Federal Hill from the Scarborough to Fort McHenry—whose defiance to British warships in the War of 1812 inspired the city's other famous poet, Francis Scott Key, to compose the national anthem—is as pleasant as any on the East Coast. This being the war's bicentennial, the National Park Service has opened a new visitor center where you can breeze through exhibits on the oft-forgotten conflict before heading outside to enjoy harbor views from the battlements.

Weekend visitors could spend their entire visit in Federal Hill, which attracts the demographic of stylish nighthawks Bostonians associate with the South End. The best crab dip in the world can be found at Regi's American Bistro. Paired with a couple of beers, a main course isn't necessary. Also

AirTran offers multiple direct flights per day to Baltimore.

If you stay at Scarborough Fair, don't miss the coffee and fresh-baked chocolate-chip cookies that await all day in the dining room.

don't miss Ryleigh's Oysters, where on weekend nights a DJ spins and dancing commences after the kitchen closes at 10 pm.

On the other side of the Inner Harbor is Baltimore's other nightlife hub. A former sailors' haunt that's been thoroughly gentrified, Fell's Point is livelier and younger than Federal Hill. For lunch, order a meaty crab-cake sandwich at One Eyed Mike's, which lays claim to hosting the world's first (and presumably only) Grand Marnier club. Patrons buy a bottle of the orange liqueur and keep it on site in a glass case, drawing from it when they visit. In the evening, check out Bond Street Social, a dimly lit, stylish spot where executive chef Neill Howell fuses Chesapeake and international cuisine (e.g., buttermilk fried chicken and citrus slaw). The pan-seared tuna with green onion and olive relish is exceptional, and, equally importantly, the Manhattan is properly mixed.

In between meals, two peculiar Inner Harbor attractions are worth a visit: the National Pinball Museum and the American Visionary Museum. The former's $12 entry fee at first seems like a rip-off, because the museum's exhibition space is nothing more than a small room explaining how pinball derived from the French game of bagatelle in the late 18th-century. But upstairs await about 40 functioning machines, including vintage tables from the 1950s. It's hard to tear yourself away from the 1978 Ted Nugent machine—the backglass shows the singer grasping a guitar/gun, auguring his present-day survivalist tendencies.

Apologies for the pun, but the American Visionary Museum is a must-see. Featuring works by self-taught artists in the mold of Howard Finster, it's housed in three beautiful old brick industrial buildings a block from the waterfront. Highlights include a ball made of 18,000 brassieres, a miniature city constructed from toothpicks and a life-size statue of a man composed entirely of electric wiring. It's a glimpse into the transgressive, John Waters side of the city. Like Baltimore itself, it's unexpectedly fascinating. ***

GLUT OF RICHES

The options abound at this Italian outpost in Davis Square.

2263 Mass. Ave., Cambridge
(617-491-1901)

MAKING THE ROUNDS Diners should seek out the burrata, a frequent special.

ON THE MEDITERRANEAN, not far from the French border, there's a small restaurant in Ventimiglia, Italy. With an array of shapes, sauces and garnishes, the catchy, if hokey, name says it all, "Pasta e Basta." As if inspired by that Ligurian eatery, Cambridge's L'Impasto, a tiny storefront near Davis Square, regales diners with almost a dozen pastas that vary from the familiar (chitarrine alla Bolognese) to the seductive (spaghetti integrale con funghi e tartufo).

A selection of antipasti kicks off the menu. The calamari ($8) were good but not memorable, with spare breading and quick flash-frying keeping them light. But the dish, consisting exclusively of ringlets, lacked the textural counterpoint usually added by tentacles, and the pale flavor made the accompanying caper aioli a necessity more than an option. The burrata ($12), a frequent special, proved more noteworthy. A refreshing, cream-soaked mozzarella wrapped in prosciutto arrived on a bed of roasted peppers that lent a savory balance to the cheese. Scamorza e prosciutto ($10) paired the same rich ham with seared, smoked mozzarella and crostini. Together with the overflowing breadbasket—L'Impasto bakes several varieties on premise—this appetizer nearly knocked out our appetites before we reached the second round. But we fought on.

After dispatching a delicious pizza bianca con prosciutto e zucchini ($12), which combined thin slices of zucchini and more of the terrific Parma ham on a first-rate, crispy crust, we launched into the range of pastas. Mezzelune brought six silky, half-moon ravioli stuffed with buffalo mozzarella and dressed in a mild—perhaps too mild for garlic lovers—pesto sauce with fresh tomato. A soupy but satisfying melanzana alla Parmigiana ($13) featured fried eggplant and a lively, pleasantly acidic tomato sauce. The garlicky gnocchetti Sardi with clams ($16) hit the spot with its deliciously bitter broccoli rabe and copious little necks in their shells. Unfortunately, the pellet-sized gnocchetti reaffirmed my reservations on gnocchi, which is often too dense, as was the case with these little sinkers. A chitarrine alla Bolognese disappointed with an under-seasoned sauce thin on meat. Finally, although I've never enjoyed the texture of whole-wheat pasta, the spaghetti integrali con i funghi e tartufo ($15) scored points with the flavor of earthy mushrooms and tantalizing truffle oil.

Wild berry tiramisu

Many diners may not make it beyond the pastas on the menu, but it'd be a mistake to leave without sampling the scaloppine di vitella ($16), a protein-rich platter of fork-tender veal cutlets topped with prosciutto, mozzarella and a white-wine sauce redolent of sage.

The biggest hit landed last, just as we thought we couldn't eat another morsel. L'Impasto's wild berry tiramisu turned out to be one of the best versions of this popular sweet I've ever encountered, with espresso-soaked ladyfingers, mascarpone, a touch of liqueur, fresh, juicy strawberries and blueberries, and whipped cream (my weakness). Though we had precious little room, the enormous serving disappeared with no regrets.

While I enjoyed my visits to L'Impasto, the experience missed a vital element. The restaurant doesn't currently offer beer and wine, nor does it allow guests the option to bring their own—a practice forbidden by the Puritans of Cambridge and Boston. (L'Impasto's liquor license is currently languishing somewhere between approved and issued.) Once the bucatini can be devoured with a glass of Barolo in hand, there's no reason not to make this a frequent stop. ✖✖✖

Q: I HAVE OILY SKIN; IS MICRODERMABRASION A GOOD TREATMENT FOR ME?

A: MICRODERMABRASION IS A GREAT procedure to keep oily skin healthy, to keep the pores clean and to help prevent break-out or pimples.

During the microdermabrasion treatment, a stream of very fine mineral crystals is moved across the skin's surface to buff away or "exfoliate" the outermost layer of dead skin cells. Left untreated, these dead skin cells will clog pores, especially with oily skin, which leads to pimples or blackheads. There is also suction on the microdermabrasion handpiece, which simultaneously vacuums away the exfoliated cells as well as excess oil from the skin. The gentle vacuum pressure also cleans out your pores, whiteheads and blackheads.

While an excellent procedure for oily skin, microdermabrasion is also an excellent treatment for sun damaged skin, dry or flaky skin, rough skin texture and uneven skin tone. It provides a good exfoliation which will give your skin a nice glow, reduces the appearance of lines and wrinkles, and will stimulate new collagen production.

Immediately after the first treatment you will see a difference - your skin will have a fresh glow and feel smoother and softer. Each procedure lasts approximately thirty minutes, and your skin will be clean, refreshed, and healthy-looking.

EXCEEDING GOALS

A band of merry misfits charms in this hockey comedy.

Goon ★★★½

Starring Seann William Scott, Jay Baruchel, Alison Pill, Eugene Levy and Liev Schreiber. Screenplay by Evan Goldberg and Jay Baruchel. Based on the book Goon: The True Story of an Unlikely Journey Into Minor League Hockey by Adam Frattasio and Doug Smith. Directed by Michael Dowse. At Kendall Square Cinema and available via Video on Demand.

OVER THE COURSE OF HIS career in minor league hockey, Doug Smith racked up more than 400 penalty minutes and zero goals. Amusingly enough, he's now a police officer in Hanson, Mass., and his autobiography Goon: The True Story of an Unlikely Journey into Minor League Hockey provided the inspiration for the most unexpectedly hilarious sleeper in ages.

I laughed so hard at Goon, I almost injured myself.

Seann William Scott stars as Doug Glatt, a sports-bar bouncer in a suburban dead-zone. He's a strongman so kindhearted that he apologizes to the town drunks before tooling them up in the alley. Forever a disappointment to his Jewish family full of surgeons, the affable lunkhead wastes his evenings in a basement watching hockey with his best friend, Ryan (coscreenwriter Jay Baruchel), who sports a mullet, hosts a cable-access sports show and communicates exclusively in arias of profanity.

Destiny strikes at a sparsely attended extra–minor league game of cut-rate nobodies. Ryan begins spouting off about how this losing exhibition "has become the kind of ass-raping that can only be comprehended by Ned Beatty or the cast of Oz." Next thing you know there's a player in the stands, going for his throat. His loyal best friend intervenes, and a hand is broken while trying to punch Doug's concrete cranium. Our hero follows up with a series of helmet-shattering blows. This earns him a spot on the team.

> The situations and dialogue are absurd, but it feels like life or death for these performers.

Doug's not particularly good at hockey—he can barely skate. But he's brilliant at beating the crap out of people, which naturally makes him a rising star in the sport. What's so fascinatingly transgressive about Goon is that it accepts these bouts of savagery—edited with an impact obviously inspired by Raging Bull—as a gentleman's code of conduct. Doug is the sweetest dim-bulb you could ever meet, but when the gloves come off he'll knock your teeth out, only to help you off the ice when he's through.

Doug eventually finds himself on the Halifax Highlanders. The team wasted their payroll budget on a $5 million contract for up-and-comer Xavier LaFlamme (the sleazy Marc-Andre Grondin), who then blew all his money on cocaine and hookers after being pounded like a ball of dough by aging, disgraced Boston Bruins cast-off Ross Rhea (Liev Schreiber, a revelation).

"Where's LaFlamme? Probably giving herpes to some single mother in the parking lot." When it comes to creative obscenity, the locker-room banter is second to none. Scripted by Baruchel and Superbad cowriter Evan Goldberg, Goon spins dazzling curlicues of invective. Our kindly, courtly "Doug the Thug" is dropped into a grab bag of drug addicts, has-beens, perverts and alcoholic never-weres, all of them boasting hilarious, region-specific accents. "There are two rules," advises a new teammate. "Don't touch my Percocets. And do you have any Percocets?" My only serious quibble with the picture is that at 92 minutes it moves way too fast and is far too short. I would've liked to spend more time with these misfits.

But there's a romantic subplot to be serviced here, with Alison Pill as a beer-stained hockey groupie who confesses to Doug: "I'm scared. You make me not want to sleep with a bunch of other guys."

And we also have the matter of Ross Rhea. Look, I know Liev Schreiber played Hamlet on Broadway and everything, but I've never seen him better than as this monster, hidden beneath facial hair, cigarettes and a sadistic smirk. Concussion statistics and hefty penalties are chasing him out of the game he loves, and it's only in "Doug the Thug" that he spots a chance to go out in a blaze of glory. So heady is their rivalry that these two are even granted a moment spoofing the immortal Pacino-meets-DeNiro coffee-shop scene in Michael Mann's Heat, and both actors play it desperately seriously.

I think that might be the key to what makes Goon so special. Nobody ever acts like they're in a comedy. (Even the obligatory Eugene Levy cameo is dead straight.) The situations and dialogue are absurd, but it feels like life or death for these performers, lending the climax an almost apocalyptic grandeur.

If I ever find myself driving through Hanson, I hope Doug Smith pulls me over. ✖✖✖

DRIVE ALL NIGHT

Needtobreathe approaches a broader audience with passionate rock.

Needtobreathe
plays at House of Blues on April 17.

ONE COULD EASILY LISTEN to the sweeping, heartland-tinged rock of Needtobreathe and have no idea of its history as an award-winning Christian band. And the South Carolina quartet, which opened for Taylor Swift at Gillette Stadium last year and now rides mainstream rock charts, would prefer to keep it that way.

"From the beginning, we felt our music is for everybody—there was no agenda," guitarist Bo Rinehart says. "The guys in the band have faith, so there's an element of that, but no more than any of the other characteristics that each member has.... We've always hated the title 'Christian band.'"

There's a precedent, as U2 dodged the Christian label early in its career, and Bruce Springsteen and many other secular rockers sing of faith and hope without being pigeonholed. "There are universal subjects that you talk about, like ambition, love and peace," Rinehart says. "What Springsteen and U2 see at the core is a pretty strong statement and story that people can relate to."

> "You kick them in the face, and they realize they haven't heard it played like that."

Needtobreathe taps universal ideals on its fourth album, The Reckoning, which debuted at No. 6 on the Billboard Top 200 last fall and continues to propel the band through a tour that hits House of Blues on April 17.

Like U2, Springsteen and Kings of Leon, Needtobreathe delivers passionate music marked by strident melodies, along with earnest emoting from Bo's raspy-voiced brother Bear Rinehart. Plus there's an Appalachian flavor from banjo and mandolin that's akin to Carolina peers the Avett Brothers.

Named after University of Alabama football coach Bear Bryant, Bear and Nathaniel Bryant "Bo" Rinehart grew up with music, football and faith in rural South Carolina. Their mother taught piano while their father played trumpet with Roy Clark on the '60s country variety show Hee Haw. He was also a pastor who ran a church camp.

"This was back in the '80s when you could blow things up and shoot fireworks at each other, and nobody would get sued," says Rinehart, 30, a year younger than his brother Bear. "My dad was definitely an outside-the-box, creative dude, and he'd always bring bands in. I remember, early on, loving concerts and the whole idea of stage and lights and entertaining."

But music took a backseat in college, when Bear was a football star and Bo studied architecture. "I'm lucky," he says. "I've got a brother who's got an amazing voice and a ton of drive. All my efforts were going into art and architecture. At some point, I realized I can do a lot of this creative stuff through the band."

Over the past 12 years, with bassist Seth Bolt (who provided a home studio) and drummer Joe Stillwell, the brothers built a following as a rock outfit, earning several Dove Awards, the Christian equivalent to the Grammys. But then came the Swift tour and The Reckoning.

To manage their breakthrough, Rinehart and his bandmates took cues from a Tom Petty DVD, as they aimed to record a classic album by focusing on their best songs. "For better or worse, we were going to push the limits of the songs," Rinehart says, "like 'We can take it this way acoustic,' then 'How many drums could we have on this song?'"

Some tracks hit overwrought peaks, but there are moments of inspiration. "A Place Only You Can Go" floats Celtic uilleann pipes, "Able" provides heartfelt country-gospel, and the hit "Drive All Night" tempers its thrust with banjo, an instrument that Rinehart adopted four years ago.

"You walked onstage with a banjo and people hated it," he says. "Then you kick them in the face, and all of a sudden they realize they haven't heard it played like that. It forces people to make a decision, not just about the banjo but anything we do."

That attitude extends to the brothers' relationship. "We just don't punch in the face—that's the rule," Rinehart says from a Michigan tour stop. "We're guys with opinions who butt heads a lot, but it takes us through the fire.... On the flip side, there's no other person you'd rather experience playing Foxboro with than your brother and your best friends." ✖✖✖

GAINING STEAM

An experiment with 5-hour Energy

AS YOU MAY KNOW, OUR nation is in the grips of an energy crisis. Many of us only have enough energy for three hours—four hours, tops. But if you work as hard as I do, then you don't quit until you've put in a full five-hour day. If you're like me, you need 5-hour Energy.

You've seen the commercials. Haggard-looking normal folk are just trying to get through their days without lapsing in and out of somnambulism. Coffee won't cut it. (No time! Coffee hot! Don't have a mug!) So our protagonists turn to the only solution that makes sense in this crazy mixed-up world: a little plastic bottle emblazoned with the words "5-hour Energy."

The other day the clock struck 2 pm and I realized that coffee wouldn't be enough to keep me on my A-game all the way until 7 pm. Start yawning during that important 6 pm conference call, and maybe the boss won't think I have what it takes to handle that big promotion. Then I have a crisis of confidence and start drinking, which leads to my dismissal, followed by a mountain of debt and a messy divorce. Eventually I die in prison. So I'm definitely better off just buying some 5-hour Energy.

If I want moderate energy, I'll do the Dew or lick a car battery.

If you've never bought the 'G, as it's called on the street, let me give you some advice. Don't go to some two-bit energy hustler slingin' the go-juice on any street corner. You know their racket: "Hey buddy, you need an eyelid-raiser? You need a pulse-jiggle? I've got what you need." Then you buy their shoddy wares only to find that you've been conned with some half-cocked 5-hour knock-off that's nothing more than puréed NoDoz cut with carpet fiber and ginkgo biloba. You want the real deal, you have to do what I did. You go to a gas station.

Striding from the Shell station with my berry-flavored elixir in hand, I peel off the safety wrap and peruse the label. "Take one half bottle for moderate energy," it reads, "Or one whole bottle for maximum energy." Moderate energy? If I want moderate energy, I'll do the Dew or lick a car battery. I swig the whole thing and prepare a list of maximum-energy activities to occupy the next five hours.

Like, I could do my taxes. On top of a mountain. Then I'll mow my lawn. And I won't even have to start the mower because I'll just push it so fast that the blades chop down the grass like a reaper's scythe. Then I'll chase cars with my dogs for a while, but eventually it'll just be me out there because they don't have 5-hour Dog Food (yet). If there's any time left, I'll tweet. My normal-energy Twitter production is frankly pathetic.

As the five-hour brew of caffeine, taurine and 8,333 percent RDA of vitamin B12 (among other ingredients) takes hold, my mood is one of reluctant alertness—I know I'm tired, I'm yawning, and yet I'm suffused with a sort of involuntary zombie motivation. I'm not sure I make the most of my five hours, though. I don't exercise or clean the house or do anything productive. But I do write a lot of tweets. (Example: "I'm on the Paleo Diet. I eat the same things as paleontologists.") Samuel Coleridge had his opium-fueled poetry; I have my 5-hour Energy tweets.

But if you want to feel wired and jumpy while you procrastinate, why not just drink a big jug of coffee? Well, according to the 5-hour Energy worldview, coffee is nothing more than a messy, slow and inconvenient means to an energetic end. Coffee is the grimy analog past, a brewed diuretic that takes several minutes to consume and may require you to refuse sugar as many as four times per Dunkin' Donuts transaction. Meanwhile, 5-hour Energy is the glorious utopian future, a place where we have time for that two-week cruise to Mexico because we're not waiting for coffee to brew, waiting for coffee to cool, waiting in the emergency room for treatment of our coffee burns and waiting laboriously for the Crest Whitestrips to peel the yellow stains from our teeth.

But coffee is more than a caffeine delivery vehicle. It's a ritual. It's a valid excuse to take a walk in the middle of the day. It's a social event. And even if a cup of Starbucks Pretentio Fair Trade Hand-ground Humanely Roasted Boxing Day Blend doesn't make the tips of my fingers shoot electric sparks, that's OK. Call me old-fashioned, but if I want to grind my teeth and sweat adrenaline, I'll drink a Red Bull.

And if I want a multihour shot of energy, I'm afraid that a competing entrepreneur has already raised the stakes. There at the gas station, alongside the 5-hour Energy, is a new row of bottles. And I'm not going to settle for five hours of energy when I can have Six Hours of Power. ×××

CELEBRATING 100 YEARS OF FENWAY

2 OPPOSING A.B.s

ANDREW BAILEY
Bailey had a reputation as an injury-prone pitcher, and wasted very little time living up to it. He's out for three months? Yikes. He's kind of like the Sox' answer to Jermaine O'Neal. Minus eight inches, 30 pounds and his own signature menswear collection.

AVERY BRADLEY
While Bailey disappoints, Bradley continues to impress. In fact, I'm ready to call him the two-guard of the future. But are the Celtics? I'm not sure. Let's just say if they sign Ray Allen to another two-year deal, I'm breaking into the Garden and taking Gino hostage.

FAIR SHOT
The B's aim for another Cup.

5 QUESTIONS FOR APRIL

Is This It for KG?
I think he'll be back for another season, but it won't be an easy sell. First, we'll have to see how Garnett feels after the playoffs. Second, Doc will have to turn on the charm. Finally, Danny Ainge will have to promise: "Kevin, I swear, I will NOT trade you next season," put it in writing and sign it in blood. And then (cue the Phil Collins drum solo)... more KG!

Can the Bruins Do It Again? Of course they can. All things considered, the Bruins are more prepared to win the Cup this season than they've been at any point in the last 40 years. Who's the biggest X-factor? Obviously, Tim Thomas. But I'll put Tyler Seguin a close second. He's like Rondo in a way. The B's are better when he's happy and in a rhythm. And who knows, with another ring, Seguin might finally get a little action around this city.

Where's Welker's Deal? Considering how the season ended, it's been a pretty upbeat winter for the Pats—except for one lingering question: Where's Welker's extension? With all the stupid money receivers got in free agency this year, something tells me the gap between Welker and the Pats is even wider than before. Here's hoping for a relatively quick resolution. Bill, the guy's had to resort to doing ads for Depends. Throw him a frickin' bone!

Is Bobby V.'s Act Already Stale?
Some people are very upset that Valentine will make a weekly New York radio appearance this season. Then again, some people are upset when Bobby V. does just about anything. ("OMG, did he just use a hard T in 'often'? Off with his head!") Here's my take: Everybody chill! I mean, I'm fine with running a guy out of town, but at least let him screw up first. Even Grady Little got a full season, and he spent half the year in a coma.

Is Alfredo Aceves the Answer?
Earlier this spring, Valentine said that Aceves wouldn't start because he was "too valuable" as a middle reliever. But now, thanks to Andrew Bailey's predictable injury, Aceves has been named closer. Huh? Whatever. Contradictions aside, I like this move. Aceves may not have much experience in the role, but I think he's got the game, attitude and toughness to get the job done. If not, maybe Pesky deserves a shot?

1 ONE SHINING MOMENT

I know we're all supposed to hate John Calipari these days, what with him being everything that's wrong with college basketball and all. But what can I say? I still have a soft spot for the guy who helped make Dana Dingle a household name. Congrats, Coach. Enjoy it while it lasts.

3 FENWAY CENTENNIAL FUN FACTS

Tub Time Remember when Fenway had urinal troughs? Of course you do. But did you know one of the original troughs is now the centerpiece of the master bathroom on John Henry's yacht? He had it preserved and converted into a bathtub.

It's a Boy! You know Wally. You love Wally! But here's something you probably didn't know: Recent DNA tests revealed that Wally the Green Monster (who made his debut in the winter of 1997) is actually the child of a torrid love affair between Rich Garces and a vat of guacamole.

Red Alert Everyone's familiar with Fenway's famous lone red seat, which commemorates Ted Williams' 502-foot home run hit on June 9, 1946. But did you know that's not red paint? In fact, it's the blood of Carl Stephens, the 53-year-old man who was fatally struck by Williams' blast.

4 DATES TO WATCH

4/11: The Stanley Cup playoffs start. As do preparations for the city of Vancouver's annual riot.

4/16: Celebrate Kenyan Appreciation Day at the 116th running of the Boston Marathon.

4/20: Sox vs. Yankees. But more importantly, it's Fenway's centennial! Fenway Park: Keeping chiropractors in business for 100 years and counting.

4/24: The Heat make their second trip to Boston this month. And this time, I hear they might even try.

"Ben Affleck

Soroff On TAYLOR SCHILLING

The rising Hollywood star talks about getting fired in Wayland, early success and kissing Zac Efron.

TAYLOR SCHILLING, 27, stars opposite Zac Efron in the new movie The Lucky One. After growing up in West Roxbury and Wayland, she graduated from Fordham University and entered NYU's graduate acting program, but left after her second year to pursue her career. She landed the leading role on the NBC hospital drama Mercy within four months. Her big-screen debut was in Dark Matter (starring Meryl Streep), and she's currently in production on Ben Affleck's third directorial effort, the CIA thriller Argo, in which she plays Affleck's wife. She lives in New York.

Jonathan Soroff: So is Zac Efron a good kisser?
Taylor Schilling: Yes. The answer to that is yes. No bones about it.

How annoying were the rumors about you and him having an on-set romance?
I didn't even know that rumor had started, but he called me up and said, "Did you hear about this?" I think his dad told him. [Laughs.]

So who's a better kisser—Zac Efron or Ben Affleck?
[Laughs.] Is this the bonus round in "Let's Try to Kill Your Career"?

Weirdest thing you've read about yourself?
That I changed my birth certificate, and that I'm actually someone else. Who'd do that? And who'd care enough to try and find out?

Do you have any lies on your acting résumé, like that you speak fluent Mandarin?
No. But there are things on there that make absolutely no sense, and Ben Affleck made fun of me for it. Because I live in New York, I have as one of my special skills that I can drive a car. When I first got out of acting school, I included a lie about being able to run long distances. I'm not sure how that was going to further my career.

Justin Bieber—are you a fan?
I don't really know his music, but I think he's cute. I look at all those pictures of him and think, "Sweet little goober."

Ever look at the tabloids and wonder who the hell are all these people?
God, yes! All the time! I have no idea. I'm actually trying to cultivate friends who know that kind of stuff so they can keep me in the loop, but I have no clue. I do know Snooki is pregnant, though.

So Ben Affleck is a big goofball, right?
I don't think you'd put him in the Justin Bieber category of goober, no. [Laughs.] He's incredibly smart and incredibly funny.

By whom have you been starstruck or intimidated?
That's such a fun question. Going on set with Ben, who was a director I was dying to work with, and especially coming from Boston, there was a bit of that. But also, I met Steven Soderbergh not long ago, and I was a little awed by his presence.

Do you and Ben do Boston accents and say stuff like "wicked pissah" on set together?
I may have done a little bit of my father, yeah. And if my dad's reading this, you don't really have one! It's something I make up. In my brain, my father has one.

You got your first big break four months after leaving acting school. Do other actors hate you when they find that out?
I don't bring that up. Not a big conversational opener. But I do feel very grateful. And I might not have been a waitress, but I did put in a lot of babysitting hours.

You call yourself an actor, and you never waited tables?
[Laughs.] I wanted to do that but was unable to function in the restaurant setting. I tried to hostess at the Villa Restaurant in Wayland, but they fired me after four days because I couldn't figure out how seating plans worked. I might also have worn a really short skirt and flip-flops, too, by accident, and they were like, "OK, go home forever."

How realistic was the show Mercy*?*
I've never been a real nurse, so I don't know. To the best of my knowledge, it's not easy to save people's lives with props. But the relationship dynamics seemed pretty believable to me.

Any medical procedure you learned to perform?
I could truly put an IV in your arm if you wanted one. Probably. Although I never really did it on anything but pig skin. But if push comes to shove, and someone's desperately in need of intravenous fluids, I'm your gal.

Weirdest fan encounter?
I don't generally get fan mail, but I've been receiving letters from a man in Russia, and I don't know how he's seen Mercy—probably on the Internet—but he'd like me to be his nurse. And, ah, that's not gonna happen, but I haven't let him know yet.

Do you think teenage girls hate you because you got to do a shower scene with Zac Efron? Do they spit at you in the mall?
Not at all! I'd never take Zac away from his people. Zac's a man of the people. There's no monopoly on Zac Efron, who's lucky enough to have his pick.

Best perk of being a celebrity?
I don't know that I'd call myself that, but if it means I get to work more and act more, I'm all for it. It's also nice to have help with clothes.

Worst part?
Nobody knows who I am. I mean, check back with me in a year, but I don't really experience that.

Would you ever do a nude scene?
I'll give you the standard actor's response: If it was integral to the film, I'd consider it.

Do you have any tattoos?
That is so intimate and personal, I'm not gonna share.... I do have a tattoo. And that's all you're gonna get. ✖✖✖

PERSONAL SPACES

THEY SAY THE COBBLER'S KIDS ARE THE LAST TO BE SHOD. WE WONDERED IF THE SAME MIGHT BE TRUE OF ARCHITECTS AND THEIR HOMES. ARE THEY TOO BUSY DESIGNING SPACES FOR OTHERS TO LAVISH MUCH ATTENTION ON THEIR OWN SURROUNDINGS? THE ANSWER IS A RESOUNDING NO—AS YOU'LL SEE FROM THE HOMES OF LOCAL ARCHITECTS JEFFREY AND CHERYL KATZ OF C&J KATZ STUDIO AND JUAN GUILLERMO URIBE RUBIO OF PAULI & URIBE ARCHITECTS LLC.

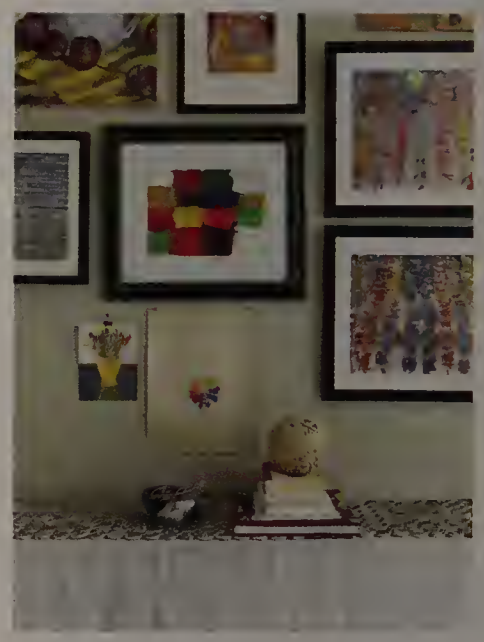
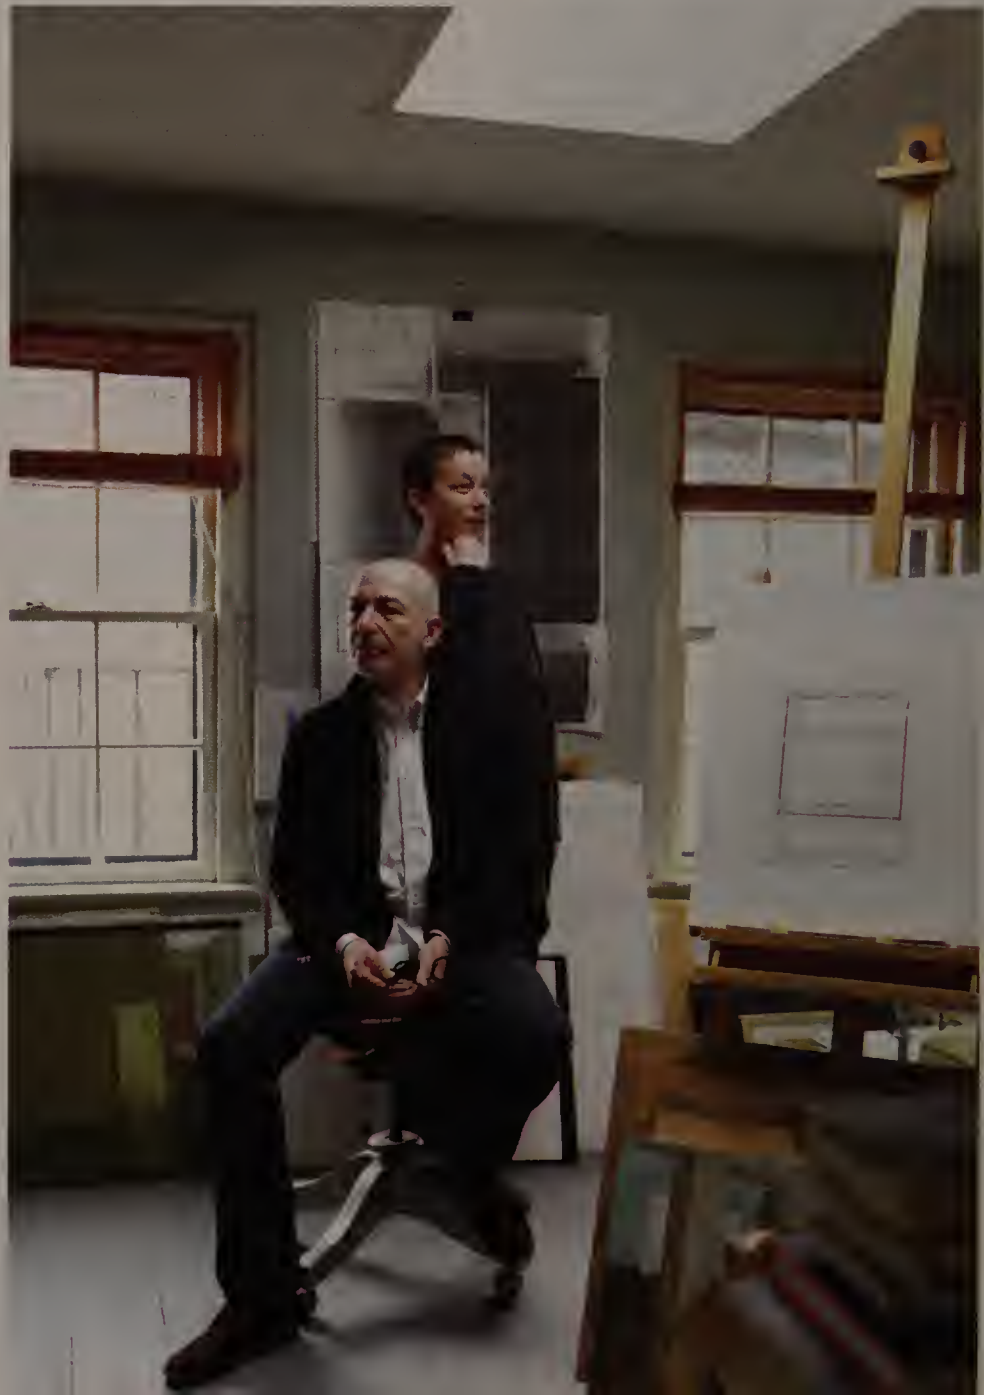
BRIGHT TURN
Uribe Rubio's loft space emphasizes natural light.

THE BLANK CANVAS OF THE SPACE ALLOWED HIM TO EXPLORE THE POSSIBILITIES.



IN 2007, JUAN GUILLERMO URIBE RUBIO CO-FOUNDED AN ARCHITECTURE FIRM SPECIALIZING IN RESIDENTIAL DESIGN. SINCE THEN, HE'S TACKLED PROJECTS FROM A LOUISBURG SQUARE HOME TO THE PROPOSED BINA FARM THERAPEUTIC EQUESTRIAN RIDING CENTER. Despite having a deft hand with traditional homes, Uribe Rubio has always been fascinated by loft living, so he chose an airy East Boston space in a building constructed by General Electric (and which later housed a bra factory). "I had always wanted to experience living in a recycled structure in an up-and-coming neighborhood with industrial and Latin flavor," he says. "More so since I'm from Bogotá." He took full advantage of the 14' ceilings and concrete columns, not to mention a sweeping panorama of the Boston skyline, and added personal flourishes. "The International Book of Lofts became my guide," he says, and the blank canvas of the open space allowed him to explore the aesthetic possibilities. To amplify natural light he painted the concrete columns and ceiling white to draw light to the front of the loft, while his love of technology led him to create a cherrywood media cabinet concealing a state-of-the-art sound system. Walls are crystal blue, and the judicious use of color makes the space feel cozier and warmer. The furniture, which he considers "the most fun on any project," had to be appropriate to the era and the space, so he chose primarily mid-20th-century contemporary pieces by the likes of Le Corbusier, Eero Saarinen and Mies van der Rohe. For a personal connection, he incorporated his grandparents' early-1900s table lamp and wall

STEP TO IT
Uribe Rubio's love of motor sports finds expression in vintage prints and paraphernalia.



sconces. A dramatic staircase was the most daunting addition, and he created it to be both functional and sculptural. Finally, his appreciation for classic cars and open-wheel racing is reflected in a selection of vintage books, magazines and a print of the famous Argentinean Formula One driver Juan Manuel Fangio. Like the architect, the space is modern and sleek, yet classic.

CHERYL AND JEFFREY KATZ WERE INDUCTED INTO THE NEW ENGLAND DESIGN HALL OF FAME IN 2009.

THEY'VE CREATED SPACES AS VARIED AS BEACON HILL TOWNHOUSES AND NANTUCKET SUMMER HOMES, RESTAURANTS LIKE SOFRA AND ALL THE BARBARA LYNCH GRUPPO SPOTS, RETAIL SPACES LIKE CRABTREE & EVELYN AND WOLFERS LIGHTING, AND NUMEROUS OFFICES. Jeffrey earned his masters in architecture from Harvard, while Cheryl came to design sideways, from the world of fashion and retailing. They formed their company, C&J Katz Studio, several decades ago, and make their home on Beacon Hill, entertaining a vast and fascinating roster of friends. Their home reflects a shared aesthetic: Filled with art, it's warm, personal and funky. "Our favorite houses are those that give visitors a strong sense of the inhabitant, even when they're not home," says Cheryl. She cites New York Times photographer Bill Cunningham's quote—"Those who seek beauty will find it"—in describing their approach to their space. They find beauty in imperfection—cracks, crevices and creases. Honesty and intimacy are paramount. They derive tremendous pleasure from transforming the ordinary into the extraordinary. Unafraid to use color boldly, make mistakes and break the rules, the Katzes are unconcerned with the provenance and pedigree of objects, instead judging them on their own merits. Despite such a hyper-eclectic sensibility, there's a clean, unfussy simplicity at work; everything seems to belong where it is in an organic way. "We've tried to create a house that speaks of the things that matter most to us: our family, friends, art, music and good food."

PERSONAL

CRAFT WORKS

BY NANCY GAINES

ETSY.COM IS THE WORLD'S VINTAGE AND HANDMADE GOODS BAZAAR, A PRACTICAL PATH FOR ARTISTS, THEIR SUPPLIERS AND AUDIENCES TO CURATE A MARKETPLACE FOR ONE: YOU.

JUST AS FOUNDER ROB KALIN INTENDED, Etsy provides a big, big sales outlet for small, small artisans who might otherwise have no reach beyond their doorstep.

Bets are, though, that what Kalin envisioned in 2005—when he launched his site as a desultory 24-year-old in Brooklyn, trying to find a better way for artsy-craftsy folk to sell their wares—falls far short of what Etsy is today. With more than 14 million members and some 800,000 shops proffering singular crafts and fashion to an online universe, Etsy has become a half-billion-dollar operation on the basis of charging a listing fee of 20 cents an item and 3.5 percent of every sale.

Of many theories as to the conception of the name, a Reader's Digest interview—reflecting the bravura and bravado of its founder—says Rob Kalin wanted a nonsense word for his company title "because I wanted to build the brand from scratch." Kalin said he took it from the Italian word etsi, which he heard a lot in Federico Fellini's 8 1/2 (of course), meaning "oh yes." In Latin, et si, means "and if."

Although Etsy's size can make some sellers feel adrift, the following local artisans have found success by hitching themselves to the online crafts juggernaut.

POP O' COLOR etsy.com/shop/popocolor

As a part-time decorator, KATIE CORRIGAN had a lot of experience fashioning window treatments. "I had accumulated a lot of fabric over the years," she says. "I was cleaning out my workroom one day and decided to make some pillows." Etsi.

In a prior life, Corrigan, 50, worked as an executive at an interactive advertising agency. "I knew what worked, and I thought Etsy has a nice platform. The things of mine that were moving were current and catchy. So I began buying fabrics specifically for Etsy."

She makes "a good living," with her pillows priced between $25 and $125. Yet, "I've thought about whether I should move to my own platform," she says. "But the analogy is Natick Mall. Etsy has a lot of foot traffic. Their audience is my audience. They do a good job of Google indexing so my name pops up for the hot designs and fabrics, what they're seeing in magazines, like the Chiang Mai Dragon pattern."

Says Corrigan, "If I have one complaint it would be that Etsy doesn't market itself enough."

JILL ROSENWALD etsy.com/shop/jillrosenwald

Since 1996, JILL ROSENWALD, 50, has crafted exuberant, patterned geometric bowls, vases, mugs and trays, many inspired by Asian and American Indian designs.

You almost don't need the photos of her artifacts to sense their vibrant creativity. For instance, the Etsy description of her "Small Bee Bowl Ikat in Tangerine" reads: "We use bee bowls in the homes of all our family members, as they are the perfect thing for containing a big ol' salad... or a heap o' fruit! The ikat print inspired by Uzbek fabrics has a Navajo vibe... killing 2 style trends with one pattern... yay me." And only $180.

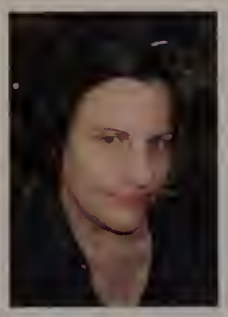
Like her husband, ceramicist Lawrence McRae (see right), Rosenwald does limited business on Etsy, which she joined nearly four years ago. She sells primarily at gift shows to retailers. But, as her husband says, Etsy's a "great way to show off."

BEE TRUE Patterns are inspired by everything from Uzbek fabrics to Navajo textiles.

Sarah M. Winchester

Nicole Popma

LAWRENCE MCRAE



etsy.com/shop/lawrencemcrae

The ceramic bowls, lamps and vases LAWRENCE MCRAE makes in the Fort Point Channel studio he shares with his wife, Jill Rosenwald, are handcrafted, he says. "with love and care," and with strikingly lacy perimeter designs. McRae, 46, grew up with ceramics in his mother's South African studio. He later lived in Canada, then came to the U.S., where he created a line of wares called "Dish" in the '90s. His eponymous line launched about three years ago.

The decorative housewares range in price from $68 for an ice cream bowl to north of $500 for specialty lamps. They're sold primarily wholesale, with the bulk of sales at gift shows to dealers, while online transactions make up "less than 10 percent" of revenue. Still, as a "supplement," says McRae, Etsy is "a better way, a new venue to sell artisanal goods."

Love, care and strikingly lacy perimeter designs.

BURNED FURNITURE etsy.com/shop/burnedfurniture

CECILIA GALLUCCIO of Somerville discovered her unusual form of decorative art, pyrography, in 2006 at an acquaintance's house in San Francisco. "I'd never heard of it," she says, even though she had studied at MassArt. "I thought, 'Here's something I'd love to do.'" She joined Etsy three years later.

Her designs are hand-drawn with burning pens, a technique that hearkens back to the ancient practice of using burn marks to detail wood, explains Galluccio, 42, who moonlights as a teaching assistant. Her works run from $22 ornaments to intricate utensils and assorted home goods, many under $100. Furniture, such as a coffee table available for $6,000, can take months to craft.

"It's very meditative," she says. "I love putting a pretty image on something functional."

CULINARIUM etsy.com/shop/culinarium

This cool industrial kitchenware line by JORDAN CASTRO, a former construction/real estate project manager living on Plum Island, was forged in the economic crash. Castro, 36, specialized in architectural facets made of concrete, like mantels and benches, but "that business became untenable," he says. Searching for eco-friendly wares for entertaining, he envisioned fabricating small concrete items that could be replicated, not customized. "I liked to cook and started making salt cellars, and last year got on Etsy."

His line of "Kitchen Requisites & Epicurean Accoutrement," includes bowls and coasters, caddies of simple, contemporary design, for $60 to $185. And the marketplace exceeded his expectations. His little kitchen implements bring in revenue of about $200,000.

STYLE PROFILE / by Alexandra Hall

"I did a lot of theater, which is how I got into telling a story through clothing."

"I pretty much never comb it, so it gathers volume that way. When it gets too out of control, I lather it with conditioner."

PARTY LIKE IT'S 1899

IN THE DAYS BEFORE THE Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum had a gift shop on premises, Mrs. Jack threw lavish, high-society parties among the nasturtiums. Now the museum is bringing back the glamour of Boston's Gilded Age with "The New Victorians," the second annual Young Patrons party honoring young philanthropists. Victorian-themed scavenger hunts and art projects are some of the highlights of the swanky soiree that'll give party-goers an intimate look at the museum's collection. Don your best cocktail attire on April 21 for the only event in town where you can dance the night away in a Venetian palace. TAMARA OMAZIC

The New Victorians takes place on April 21, 8–11 pm, $100–$150, at the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum, 280 The Fenway, Boston (617-566-1401) gardnermuseum.org.

What a Pill

Singing the Blues

If you thought a musical about mental illness would lack the mass appeal of, say, Wicked, director Paul Daigneault and the Speakeasy Stage Company would disagree—they've had to extend the run of Next to Normal twice due to popular demand. The smash hit mixes serious subject matter with colorful showstoppers (like "Who's Crazy/My Psychopharmacologist and I"), but you'll have to make it to the Boston Center for the Arts before April 22, when it checks out for good. Virginia Billy Barry

Reviews by Sean Burns

American Reunion NOT REVIEWED A couple of weeks ago, some friends won tickets to an advance promotional screening of this belated fourth installment in the American Pie franchise. As you might imagine, I'm not exactly the most popular guy among studio representatives these days, so it surprised nobody when I was recognized by a local publicist and turned away at the door. It was later, very politely, explained to me that I'd be refused admission to all upcoming American Reunion screenings, save for the one conveniently scheduled to take place one day after our deadline for review. Sorry to let you folks down again. I do try my best to keep you informed about as many current releases as I possibly can, but they sure make it difficult sometimes. Check out the next issue for a better-late-than-never review of American Reunion, which I'm sure is wonderful. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

A Thousand Words ★ Shot in 2008 and only released to cash in on a comeback that never really happened, Murphy's latest pile of kid-friendly treacle reteams him with Meet Dave director Brian Robbins for a fable about a literary agent named Jack cursed by a New Age guru. The overexplained premise states that Murphy has spiritually bonded with a tree in his backyard, which loses a leaf upon every word he utters. When the leaves all drop off, both Murphy and the tree will die. First of all, trees don't die when they lose their leaves, but why look for logic in a project that thinks we'll find any pleasure in denying this comic his distinctive voice? The only laughs arrive in a third-act veer into seriousness, including hallucinations of a crying young Jack chasing his deceased father through a field of wheat. It's like The Tree of Life brought to you by the makers of Norbit. (In the suburbs.)

Being Flynn ★ ½ As the film is based on local author Nick Flynn's memoir Another Bullshit Night in Suck City, the title change alone shows how the story has been sanitized for mass audience approval. Adapted and directed by Paul Weitz, who made the promising About a Boy and has since devoted his career to backwash like Little Fockers and American Dreamz, Flynn stars wet noodle Paul Dano as a writer wrestling with substance abuse issues while trapped in the shadow of his alcoholic cab-driver dad (Robert De Niro). Any movie that puts De Niro behind the wheel of a taxi is asking for trouble, and as the actor delivers a rote collection of inconsistent behavioral tics, he fails to locate a character with any sense of tragic heft. Scrubbed clean of any regional color or naturalistic grit, the entire movie looks like it was shot on a Hollywood soundstage. I didn't buy it for a minute. (At West Newton Cinema and in the suburbs.)

The Cabin in the Woods ★★★ We've all seen this flick before, where a few teens shack up in a cottage for a booze- and hormone-fueled weekend that turns predictably horrific. But what you haven't seen is a nutzoid explanation for where these kinds of pictures come from, and Buffy the Vampire Slayer brain-trust Joss Whedon and Drew Goddard have concocted a snarky deconstruction involving angry gods and a couple of stiffs going through the motions in a high-tech scare factory. Character actors Richard Jenkins and Bradley Whitford spin gold out of Whedon's quips, engineering slasher-film tropes during just another day at the office. Younger members of the cast give game and, at times, quite purposefully awful performances, with Thor's Chris Hemsworth the standout for deliberate inelegance. The joke within a joke eventually escalates to giddy levels of carnage and insanity, yet you find yourself suffering from a weirdly hollow feeling when all is said and done. Clever only gets you so far. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Casa de Mi Padre ★ ½ A five-minute Funny or Die sketch dragged out to feature length, Will Ferrell's latest bizarre project finds the comedian playing a lunkhead son of a Mexican rancher caught in the middle of a bordertown drug war. Borrowing the goofy conventions of '70s exploitation movies and telenovelas, the flick wallows in laughably phony background paintings, fake horses, overwrought music cues and deliberately bumpy camera movements. Shot entirely in Spanish, this science experiment costars Y Tu Mamá También sidekicks Gael García Bernal and Diego Luna as dueling drug kingpins, with Man on a Ledge scene-stealer Genesis Rodriguez as the woman making everybody crazy. I suppose director Matt Piedmont deserves credit for pulling off such an elaborate stunt, but exactly how long are we supposed to find it amusing? It doesn't have enough jokes to work as a parody, yet the movie is far too busy winking at the audience to become interesting on its own goofy terms. The whole thing just kind of sits there. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

The Deep Blue Sea ★★★★ Lush and altogether devastating, director Terence Davies applies his lyrical post-WWII remembrances to Terence Rattigan's play about the inequities of desire. At first it seems an odd fit, with Davies' pregnant pauses colliding against Rattigan's astringent dialogue, but together they build a cumulative impact that just about flattened me. Rachel Weisz delivers a hypnotic performance as a bored housewife who finds herself enthralled by Tom Hiddleston's ill-tempered RAF pilot. Positioning a forgotten birthday as a fulcrum from which the movie drifts back and forth in time, The Deep Blue Sea burrows into the inconvenient truth that sometimes you just love someone more than that person is capable of loving you. Weisz doesn't get all actressy and shrill about it. Indeed, what makes the movie stick in your gut is her resignation from the beginning of this ill-fated affair—the look in her eyes suggesting she already knows exactly how this is all going to end. (At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

Friends With Kids ★★ This gimmicky rom-com tries hard to trumpet its bold irreverence but settles for such boring plot mechanics and conventional Hollywood morality that it might as well star Katherine Heigl. Parks and Recreation's Adam Scott and writer/director/producer Jennifer Westfeldt are the kind of friends who finish each other's sentences and make bawdy jokes about terminal illness and their failed relationships. Naturally, they decide to have a baby together for reasons that only make sense according to a screenwriter's manual. The two circle their way around a great deal of tortured logic before eventually arriving at the absurd conclusion that they'll remain friends and split custody with no complications. How's that work? Just once I'd like to see a movie in which a man and a woman can be platonic friends without hooking up. Wasting a killer supporting cast borrowed from Bridesmaids, it's a movie about Scott and Westfelt taking a torturously long time to finally figure out that they belong together. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

The Hunger Games ★½ Seabiscuit director Gary Ross' careless version of Suzanne Collins' popular best-seller is my least favorite kind of adaptation—a timid affair so preoccupied with checking off plot points to please the established fanbase that it can't be bothered to engage the uninitiated. Jennifer Lawrence stars as a quick-witted teenage archer tossed into a horrific

We'll Always Have Paris

Bonjour, Mon Amour

ArtsEmerson has made a habit of screening iconic musicals in its Gotta Dance series, with showings of Gentlemen Prefer Blondes and Singin' in the Rain. Now Vincente Minnelli's An American in Paris, one of Gene Kelly's most beloved films, is back in a restoration print of the 1951 Gershwins-scored showstopper. It runs April 20–22, with a special presentation on April 20 by Minnelli biographer and Emerson alum Mark Griffin. Ariel Spierer annual reality-TV tournament, during which poor children are forced to fight to the death for the amusement of the one percent. There's a nasty satirical point being made here, but I'll be damned if Ross knows what it is. Lacking the budget or scope for what's being attempted, this future dystopia is a lot of chintzy costumes, bad wigs and hambone character actors. Presumably attempting to obscure the limited production design and keep the violence to a PG-13 rating, Ross shoots The Hunger Games in jerky ellipses submerged in murky cinematography. Most of the time it's downright impossible to follow what's happening on-screen. I know you loved the book, but this is terrible filmmaking. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Jeff, Who Lives at Home ★ ½ The DIY pleasantness of directors Jay and Mark Duplass plays just fine on the indie -festival circuit, where slight narratives and a lack of ambition can coast on microbudgeted charm. But in a multiplex production with a cast stocked with stars, the brothers' slacker ethos just translates as lazy. Jason Segel stars as the titular 30-year-old stoner pondering questions of the universe in his mother's basement, while Ed Helms grates as his tacky brother who's worried that his wife (Judy Greer) might be cheating. In a completely disconnected thread, Susan Sarandon turns up as their cubicle-drone mother who's intrigued by the attentions of a secret admirer at the office. Not much at all happens in this picture, which subsists for 90 minutes on improvisation and some shoddy camerawork. The Duplass trademark is to constantly flick the zoom lens for no discernible reason, as if frantically signaling that they're not ready for prime time. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Jiro Dreams of Sushi ★★★ Jiro's sushi restaurant has only 10 seats. If you can get reservations, which book a month in advance, expect to pay upward of $300 a meal for a dining experience that sometimes lasts a mere 15 minutes, while the proprietor gazes impatiently at you as he hands out slices of raw fish. And yet, Sukiyabashi Jiro has received three stars from the Michelin guide, and food critics such as Tokyo's Mashuhrio Yamamoto wax rhapsodic about Jiro Ono's sushi as if it were the second coming. David Gelb's strangely engrossing documentary is foodie-ism at its most monastic. Profiling prickly 85-year-old master chef Jiro Ono, it's mainly a film about the pursuit of perfection. The humorless and disciplined Ono keeps a samurai warrior's code in the kitchen, and it's fascinating to watch the precision of a master at work. Yet the movie flirts with sadness in the margins. As much as we admire the subject's skill and commitment to professionalism, is this really all there is to life? (At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

John Carter ★ ½ Disney's $250-million megaflop has already earned a place in the history books as a cautionary tale in confounding potential audiences with misguided marketing, and the studio's thuggish attitude toward members of the press stands as a manual on how to lose friends and alienate people. But what about the movie itself? As an apologist for many a blockbuster bomb, I'd love to be able to report that this wounded baby bird was mishandled by executives. Alas, it's dreadful. Based on Edgar Rice Burroughs' 1917 novel, A Princess of Mars, which was already ransacked by Star Wars and Avatar, John Carter is a talky hodgepodge of overfamiliar elements. Friday Night Lights' Taylor Kitsch tamps down any semblance of charisma, starring as a haunted Civil War vet who becomes an unlikely savior during a Red Planet war. Bogged down with narrative dcad ends and goofy names, the movie is so busy trying to set up sequels that it forgets to tell a story of its own. (In the suburbs.)

Project X ★ ½ Shouldn't the found-footage/fake-documentary fad be over by now? Or is it just easier for lazy filmmakers who don't bother planning shots to make a movie on shaky equipment? Whatever the case, this Cloverfield of teenage sex comedies doubles down on the stale wild party clichés and tries passing them off as something new thanks to an overdose of amateur Flip cam footage. Three high-school nerds decide to throw a rager and, as tends to happen when parents are out of town, the guest list quickly blossoms out of control. So we've got one boozy, sex-seeking night spent with a mousy kid and his short sidekick, along with a mystical geek rounding out the trio. Sound familiar yet? Project X shamelessly rips so many pages from the script of Superbad that Seth Rogen and Evan Goldberg have grounds for a lawsuit. At the very least, costar Oliver Cooper should consider sending Jonah Hill a letter of apology. (At Fresh Pond and in the suburbs.)

21 Jump Street ★★★ ½ It won't win any awards, but 21 Jump Street is terrific where you least expect it. Fast, funny and smarter than its demeanor initially lets on, the film stars Channing Tatum and Jonah Hill as an inspired pairing of mismatched dummy cops. The absurdly handsome Tatum has the soul of a clown, and Hill remains a doughy ball of need. What's most enjoyable about the duo's unexpected chemistry is that they seem to genuinely like each other, and often shout it from the rooftops. Theirs is the most effusive bromance we've seen in this unfortunately named genre. Our heroes are tasked with infiltrating a designer drug ring that operates out of a wealthy, suburban high school, and when it gets really interesting, 21 Jump Street becomes more like a dude-comedy remake of Francis Ford Coppola's Peggy Sue Got Married, wondering what you'd do differently, if given a second crack at your teenage years. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Lazing Down Tracks

All In a Cord While saddled with the tenuous label of "pop band," the double-drummer group White Rabbits isn't one to perform within the limits of genre. Using traditional instruments in unexpected ways, the Missouri natives infuse fresh variety into stable rock beats. The result is something consistently inconsistent: a playfulness that grabs listeners and keeps them moving through each track of their new album, Milk Famous. Lead singer Stephen Patterson admits to influences like Beyoncé and Kanye West, which perhaps explains their mass appeal. Catch them on April 14 at Paradise Rock Club. Bobby McGee

Heads Up

Radcliffe Bailey's chilling slave ship sculptures sailed into Wellesley College's Davis Museum this spring, along with a fleet of eerie paintings, old family photos and meditative collages. With themes of lineage, slavery and music at the helm, Bailey navigates the past in a way that recalls old wounds but also summons tranquility and strength, as with his most famous piece, Windward Coast, which comprises undulating keys from more than 400 pianos. See that work and more at Memory as Medicine through May 6.

RESTAURANTS

ABE & LOUIE'S [793 Boylston Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-536-6300, abeandlouies.com] Abe & Louie's is the quintessential American steakhouse, serving prime cuts of corn fed, Midwestern beef, fresh seafood and garden produce. Steaks are aged on the bone for six weeks to ensure maximum flavor. Signature dishes include the bone-in filet mignon, NY sirloin and swordfish chop. With its high quality food, outstanding service and classic interiors, this award-winning restaurant has consistently remained a Boston favorite since its debut in 1998.

BISTRO DU MIDI [272 Boylston Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-426-7878, bistrodumidi.com] Bistro du Midi showcases authentic Provencal cuisine in a warm, welcoming, and beautiful setting. Inspired by the ingredients and culinary techniques of the Midi region in France, Executive Chef, Robert Sisca presents modern, ingredient-driven creations that are at once refined and approachable. From a carefully conceived charcuterie selection to the freshest seafood, meats and vegetables, Bistro du Midi brings the simple, clean and bold flavors of Provence to Boston.

JOE'S AMERICAN BAR & GRILL [9 locations in the Boston greater area, visit joesamerican.com] Joe's serves classic American comfort food in a comfortable setting, making it a local favorite for lunch, dinner, weekend brunch or take-out. Everything is made in-house, from the famous clam chowder to their juicy burgers or fall-off-the bone ribs. With carved wood, stained glass and vintage lighting, Joe's is reminiscent of your favorite New England watering hole. Try the bloody mary or one of their local beers on tap.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

THE PURPLE SHAMROCK [1 Union Street, Boston, 617-227-2060, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the freedom trail across from Boston City Hall on Union Street. The Purple Shamrock is the perfect place to stop by and have a bite to eat. The fare is composed of New England specialties with burgers, sandwiches, hearty pastas, fresh seafood, tender steaks and other great favorites. Let's not forget their infamous Shamrock Brunch served every Saturday and Sunday that is often paired with live music. After dark, The Purple Shamrock has nightly entertainment with a mix of live music, karaoke and DJ's. At The Purple Shamrock there is something for everyone.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post- game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

On the Town!

Boston's finest restaurants and clubs

JOSE MCINTYRE'S [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Jose McIntyre's is located across from the Aquarium on Milk Street. This is Boston's only Mexican-Irish restaurant and bar. For close to two decades Jose's has been an institution with the after work and late night party crowds. If the Dos Equis man is the world's most interesting man, Jose McIntyre is the world's most entertaining. Come experience the most unique venue in Boston. With 5 rooms, 3 bars, 2 floors and a game room; José is the perfect place to unwind with co-workers or host a celebration.

BARS & CLUBS

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 Dartmouth Street, Boston, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

BRUNCH

THE BILTMORE BAR & GRILL [1205 Chestnut Street, Newton, 617-527-2550, thebiltmoregrill.com] Opened at the start of Prohibition, the Biltmore started out as a speakeasy and has been a neighborhood favorite in Newton's historic Upper Falls ever since. Brunch is served Saturday, Sunday and Monday holidays featuring creative menu items such as Huevos Tacos, Sausage Fritter Sandwich and Biltmore's famous Chicken & Waffles. Brunch libations such as the Danish Bloody Mary and Red Beer (The Cure!) help ease your way into the day.

LOCAL 149 [149 P Street, South Boston, 617-269-0900, local149.com] A neighborhood joint in South Boston's Citypoint, Local 149 offers historic roots and lots of heart & soul. Brunch is served Saturdays and Sundays featuring new classics from Chef Leah DuBois such as "Toast To Life and Bacon" and the "Lobster MacMuffin". 'Spicy Pimento Cheese Fries' and 'Dixie Chicken" start the day right washed down with a Bucket of High Life ponies or the $5 Milkshake.

MOOO.... [15 Beacon Street, Boston, 617-670-2515, mooorestaurant.com] In the shadow of Beacon Hill's lofty State House and within the grandeur of the XV Beacon Hotel is MOOO...., a steakhouse extraordin-aire. Chef David Hutton offers a modern approach of fine selected meat and seafood dishes. Breakfast and lunch weekdays, dinner daily, Sunday brunch, bar and lounge. An impressive Wine Cellar and discreet Parlor Suites are the solution to successful business entertaining and private dining. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] "Beer's not just for breakfast anymore." At the Sunset Super Sunday Brewers Brunch, try our thick-cut French toast, potato skins and eggs, eggs benny, crispy quesadillas or our All You Can Eat Brunch Taco Bar, including a free Sunday paper and your first beery mary or mimosa. Full menu also available. 112 taps, 300+ microbrews.

Eine Kleine Nachtmusik

While music is the food of love, it's nice to have a melody paired with an actual meal, which is why the New England Conservatory's annual Feast of Music is such a stellar evening.

Held at The Fairmont Copley Plaza, the black-tie hoo-ha attracted the likes of Msr. Le Chevalier Marvin Gilmore, witness to history Joan Kennedy, department-store heiress Hope Baker and her ever-affable nephew, William Grote, the stunning Ashley Wisneski with her father, Frank, and his beautiful blonde wife, Lynn Dale, mutual-fund deity Peter Lynch and his beautiful blonde wife, Carolyn, the swanlike Stephanie Warburg, sly fox Sam Plimpton and his ravishing other half, Wendy Shattuck, assorted de Bragancas, interior designer Duncan Hughes, and Shakespeare impresario Steve Maler, among equally lovely others.

The evening had an Austrian theme, and cocktails were followed by a feast in the grand ballroom prepared by white-hot New York chef and Vienna native Kurt Gutenbrunner. Between each course, NEC students performed works by Austrian composers, and afterward, it was back into the Oval Room for dessert and dancing, where Guttenbrunner's good friend Elvis Costello made a surprise appearance.

In short, the evening was flawless, with the possible exception that they missed a perfectly good opportunity to play "Rock Me Amadeus."

Thin Ice

It was the same place, The Fairmont Copley Plaza, but a different crowd when the venerable Skating Club of Boston celebrated its 100th anniversary with the Skaters Ball, a benefit for Youth in Sport that attracted an entire supermarket aisle's worth of stars who've appeared on Wheaties boxes.

Among the Olympic medalists: Tenley Albright, Paul Wylie, Dorothy Hamill (who's still rockin' the 'do), Brian Boitano (who's still hot) and Nancy Kerrigan (ditto). Among the mere mortals: cochairs Sally Zeghibe and Suna Murray, scion of ACK James Shepherd IV, the statuesque Jane Codman, bluebloods Donna and Bob Storer, decorator to the über-fabulous Eric Roseff, and one man about whom a friend observed, "His dates keep getting younger and blonder."

Dinner was delicious and the dancing, not surprisingly, would've earned nothing but 10s from a panel of Olympic judges (except maybe the surly Russian one). However, there was a surprising lack of sequins.

As one woman put it, "I'm a little disappointed. I was expecting to see some major fashion disasters."

Dinner was delicious and the dancing would've earned nothing but 10s from a panel of Olympic judges (except maybe the surly Russian one).

Priorities, Priorities

AD 20/21, as the name might imply, is a show of art and design from this century and last, and the Gala Preview Party, held at the Cyclorama, attracted aesthetes, tastemakers and many of the usual suspects.

A benefit for the Boston Architectural College, the evening offered the opportunity to browse the beautiful bric-a-brac and rub elbows with such beautiful people as the evening's honoree, international style avatar Vicente Wolf, as well as the aptly named Estrellita Karsh (widow of legendary photographer Yousuf), interior designer to the stars Eileen Patterson, hunky magazine editor Kyle Hoepner, the dashing and debonair Ted Landsmark, and equally glittery others.

Yours truly, meanwhile, fell in love with a Rockwell Kent painting that broke my heart with its $45,000 pricetag, and that was one of the more modest offerings.

As one attendee put it, "I'm trying to choose between my son's college education and that cocktail table over there. Right now, the cocktail table is winning." ×××

the IMPROPER

Advice to a Young Bon Vivant

If I had a thousand sons, the first humane principle I would teach them should be to forswear thin potations and to addict themselves to sack.

FALSTAFF, HENRY IV, PART I

Adam DeTour

Watch an episode of Real Housewives and you get a stark education in the perils of drinking, so let's not harp. But it's not all hilarious emotional carnage—there's the downside where you might faceplant in a public urinal (or urinate on a public plant). Also, beware of drunken sentiment. Alcohol is a spawning pool of cliché, both in feeling and expression. That's why it's possible for a drunk to say to a recent acquaintance, "You've got a beautiful soul, man," and really mean it. But he also might write The Great Gatsby. It's a matter of personal constitution, like whether you're the type who orders a Bud while you wait for your Guinness to settle.

Drink can harden your brain like an aerated cheddar, so keep it limber with new ideas. For instance, I've been recently reading about traditional Indian medicine, specifically chakras, the yogic concept of nodes of energy within the physical body. If there's such a thing as a booze chakra, I'll bet it's located square in the frontal lobe. A third-eye lid, if you will. The more you exercise it, the less conscious you become, until you curl into warm, animal befuddlement, just like melding into eternity. This lasts about six hours, when you wake up asking for VitaminWater.

Lastly, ignore the Puritans. Sanctimony is the refuge of the hypocrite. Wagging a finger looks like an invitation to pull it, and nobody likes a farty pants.

A HEALTHY POUR

JUST AS CHEMISTRY IS VITAL to the creation of the cocktail, biomechanics is fundamental to the act of bartending. Brandishing a shaker above your head may catch a patron's eye, but it impinges the shoulder and swells the tendons. "If you're trying to look like the guys from Cocktail, you're more likely to get injured," says Jessica Douglas of Joint Ventures. Teaming up with the Boston Bartenders Collaborative, Douglas has taught mixers around the city to keep their shoulders back, the shaker close to their chests and elbow tendinitis on the tennis courts. "If you're in pain, it's a lot harder to be that friendly face at the bar," says Douglas. In a career spent doling out the cure for what ails you, it's important to keep one's own wellness in mind.

HOT TOPIC

We had it on good authority that the melts at Cafe Kiraz were worth trying. After all, they're the go-to grub for chef Jason Bond when he's not cooking around the corner at Bondir. Of the five options, start with the veggie-friendly take: an antipasto-like stack of artichoke hearts, tomatoes, black-olive paste silky enough to squeeze from a squirt bottle and a bubbly blanket of provolone, all toasted on your choice of bread. ELIZABETH BOMZE

Bear Facts

The Bruins' bear returns from the viral "Bruins' Hockey Rules" videos as the star of his own mini-sitcom, Bear and the Gang. These short clips are part of the Digital Entertainment Network (DEN) and are available on a new mobile app. Digging the laugh track and retro intro music, we wondered how the bear would fare were he cast with real sitcom heavy-hitters.

Bewitched The bear eats too much honey and freaks out worse than Jessie on caffeine pills.

The Brady Bunch The bear hits Marcia in the nose with a hockey puck, opening a story line that explores the true value of inner beauty.

Friends "Smelly bear, smelly bear. It's not your fault."

Seinfeld The bear joins the infamous "contest." He outlasts everyone thanks to hibernation.

Will & Grace Drunk Karen mistakes the bear for Grace. "Oh honey," she says. "We need to get you waxed."

The Facts of Life Tootie finds the bear rummaging in the kitchen. "We are in trou-ble," she says, before being eaten.

Home Improvement The bear subs in for Al on Tool Time, and no one notices. "Shut up, Al," says Tim, before being eaten.

NORTH END STAR

Iocco is back at the helm.

LIKE A WELL-CUT gemstone, Marisa Iocco shines in just about any setting. From Galleria Italiana to Bricco to Mare, wherever Boston's only Italian-born female chef has cooked she's created notable dishes—even her bread pudding has a following.

Now, after six years spent consulting, Iocco's helming the kitchen at Gennaro's 5 North Square, focusing on a menu dubbed MangiAmerica. At first glance, it's classic North End: alfredo, cacciatore, saltimbocca and marsala. But here the fettucine is made with delicate eggless pasta enriched with mascarpone. At lunch, she offers meatballs inspired by chicken marsala or veal saltimbocca. Fresh mozzarella is offered in forms ranging from plump, cool knots served over warm, garlicky broccoli rabe to sliced and lightly battered for a fried cheese and anchovy sandwich.

This isn't quite comfort food; it's got too much finesse. Hard to define precisely, but it's enough to know that Iocco is back at the stove.

KITCHEN is the simple name for Scott Herritt's newest restaurant, which takes the place of Pops in the South End. Slated for a late-May, early-June opening, it promises fare Herritt (Grotto, Marliave) describes as American pot luck, inspired by his extensive collection of old cookbooks.

AT THE NEWLY OPENED TONIC in Jamaica Plain, executive chef Ryan Kelly combines the precision he learned at Clio with a more home-style approach that fits the Forest Hills neighborhood. In addition to the omnipresent pork belly (here slow-roasted, tempura fried, then tossed in five-spice compound butter), you'll find pork chops, a burger, and a rib-eye steak served with green beans, carrots and salt potato, the last a nod to Kelly's upstate New York origins.

GOING TO SEE the new Three Stooges movie? Don't miss Jasper White's cameo in the last scene.

Hunger Manes

CELEBRITIES AND STYLISTS ALIKE are taking a page from the hit movie The Hunger Games. Cherry Petenbrink, colorist and extension artist at L.A.'s Salon Republic, created more than 500 colorful wigs for the film, using both a punk rock aesthetic and subdued looks in a pastel palette. Rachel McAdams, Lauren Conrad and January Jones have all since been inspired to tint their manes with soft springtime hues.

To live out my own Hunger Games fantasy, I enlisted the help of hair stylists at Salon Capri in Newton to recreate a version of the look sported by one of the most memorable characters: Effie Trinket. Teased pin-set curls finished with a glossing spray capture the essence of Effie's Marie Antoinette–esque updo. To give me a temporary taste of pastel highlights, stylist Marisa Falone took inspiration from looks off the New York Fashion Week runway, adding color with artist chalks. Hair chalking adds Easter-egg-dye pops without the commitment. Use soft pastels on lightly damp hair, rubbing the pigment in and twisting strands for added texture. The result is fit for a sci-fi socialite, or for the cutthroat fields of high style.

MATING CALLS

The legend of the island of Nix's Mate recounts how, in the 1700s, a pirate named William Fly copped a serious attitude during his hanging. As a reminder to other buccaneers not to mess with the Man, the local authorities left his body dangling on the now-submerged Harbor Island. One would think that when Bostonian Hospitality Group decided on the name, they were banking on folks having a much keener knowledge of historical minutiae. Or maybe not. The restaurant, now open in the downtown Hilton, dedicates an entire wall to setting the record straight for anyone who thought it might've been named after Ben Cherington.

THEREFORE I HAM
Egg enlivens flatbread.

Formerly the forgettable Caliterra, the decor leaps from a West Elm catalogue with warm taupes and grays, gauzy drapes and tufted seating. Designer Michael Nedeau mixed wood reclaimed from the Boston Pier with maple and dark walnut to add a rustic elegance, juxtaposed by twinkling chandeliers and jar lights. The multiple private dining options and 22-seat bar seem primed to capitalize on the Financial District locale.

Most exciting is chef David Nevins' menu. Known for mixing seafood into unexpected combinations during his stint at Neptune Oyster, Nevins invented dishes like the veal and tuna sandwich before enlisting at Todd English's Olives. At Nix's Mate, classics like duck confit and fried calamari share menu space with intriguing headscratchers like meatballs with clam sauce and lamb chops with tuna dressing. "It takes a little bit of trust," he laughs, "but it's funky and fun." For the more expected offerings, like fried clams or Buffalo wings, it's about quality control. "I'm taking a simple approach and just doing the best possible versions. It's the ultimate." If they're as good as he says, there may be a legend to find here yet.

KYLE WRIGHT

Q&A

STAR POWER

Designer and Fashion Star mentor Nicole Richie will host the grand opening of National Jean Company's Newbury Street boutique with a Winter Kate and House of Harlow fashion show on April 25.

What's your favorite wardrobe item?
It's hard to say, but probably my mom's vintage Alaïa gown from the early '80s. It's a simple black, floor-length gown with a low-cut back.

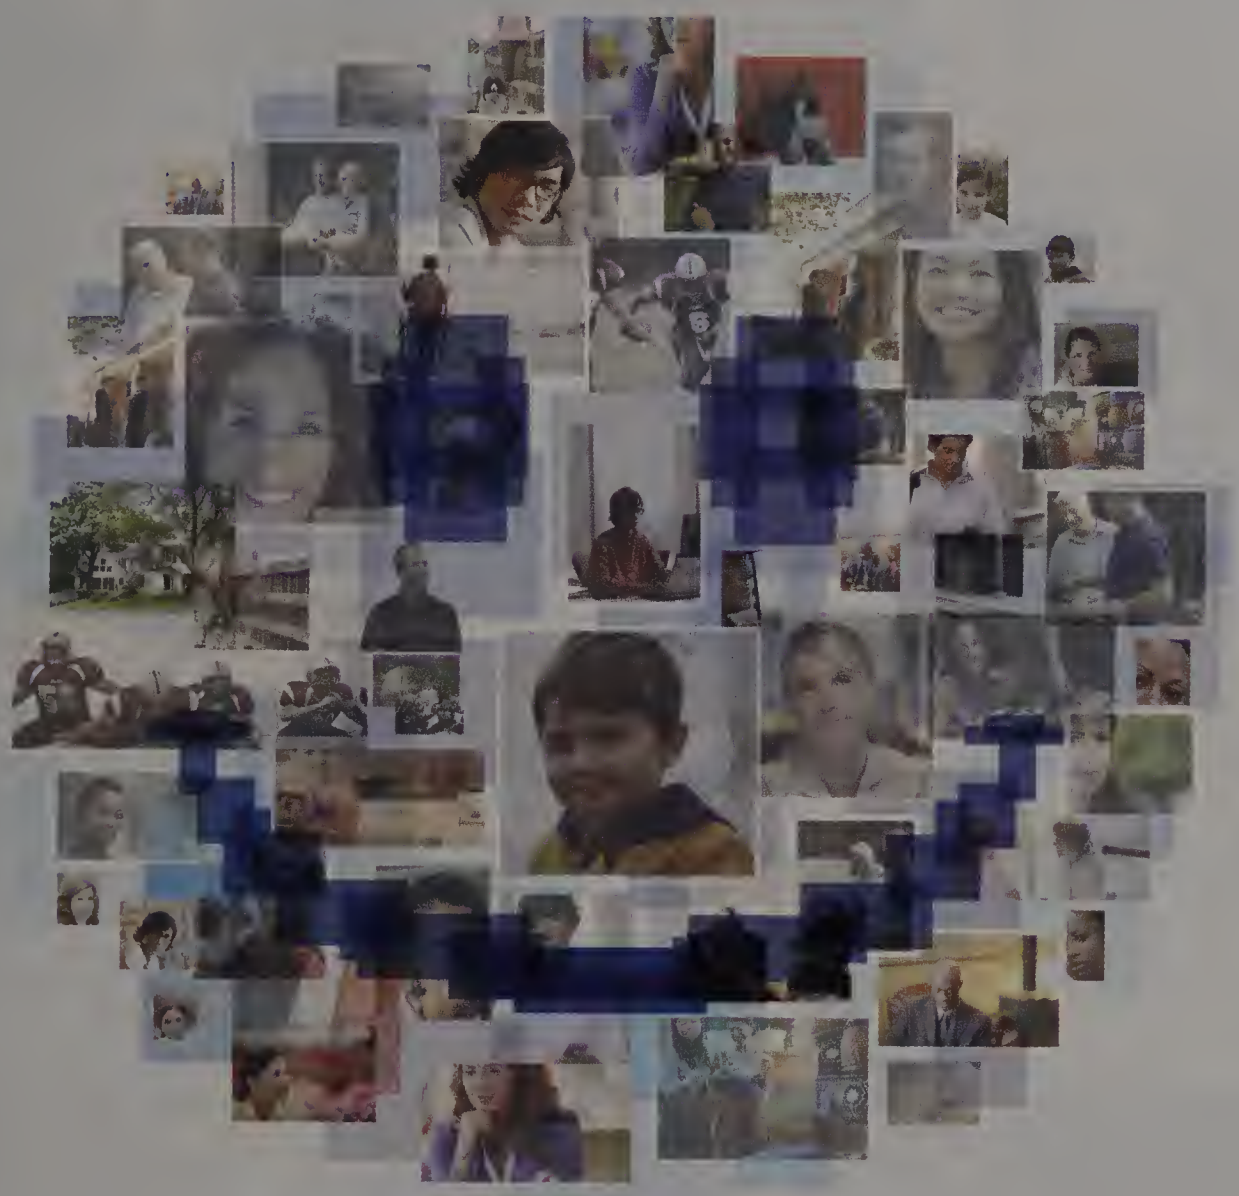
What have you learned from being on Fashion Star?
That a little goes a long way. There are so many talented designers out there, and they just need a little guidance help bring their talent to life.

How has your personal style evolved?
It's constantly changing, that's the best part of fashion! Everyone goes through phases, and the way I dressed when I was in my early-20s is very different than how I'd dress now, but that's the beauty of it.

As a designer, what inspires you most?
I get inspired by the everyday items, but more specifically, music, people and places. Music from every genre, the people around me and, of course, all of my travels.

What's the most exciting spring trend?
I tend to not follow trends. I just dress for myself and what I feel the best in. There are a few staples that I feel are a must, like a good leather jacket, a pair of closed-toe pumps and, of course, sunglasses.

How do you balance vintage clothing with new pieces?
Personally, if I'm mixing vintage, I always try to be understated with everything else so that the vintage piece becomes the focus.



How does your creative process differ for each of your lines?
It doesn't really. Even though they're under different names, the overarching theme and aesthetic of modern bohemian is reflected in each collection.

BABY ON BOARD

TO THE WOMAN ON THE INBOUND ORANGE LINE TRAIN AT 8:45 AM ON APRIL 5: Seriously? The moment a group of us stepped on at Sullivan station, you threatened to beat up anyone who bumped into you or your baby stroller. Then you verbally abused someone with foul and derogatory language. I have never encountered such an angry and vile person. What a terrific example to set for your child! It's rush hour and you have a stroller the size of a compact car on the T. Chill the f out. Missed manners

To the obnoxious prat sitting next to us at Chez Henri:

It was really charming of you to look us up and down and then remark to your 12-year-old girlfriend, "Remember those awful people we had to sit next to in Florence?" What a pleasant way to start the evening. We were an elbow's length away! Sorry we neglected to have liposuction, hair plugs and a complete makeover before dinner. We were fascinated by your lengthy, detailed thesis comparing Spanish cheese to French, or your pompous discourse on the wines of Bordeaux while your young lady tried to stay awake past her bedtime. It was especially gentlemanly to deny her the dessert she asked for so you could lecture on the cheese platter. I hope those "awful people" you sat next to in Florence didn't understand a word of English, enabling them to ignore you, those awful people we had to sit next to last night in Cambridge.

Awfully annoyed

To the stupid trophy wife on Boston Common:

Thank you for letting your unleashed mutt run over and destroy my two-year-old son's favorite ball. Your apology, "He really likes people!" was as useless as you and your unwashed canine. Sad dad

WINE AND WHIMSY

Vermont's Pitcher Inn is equal parts luxury and quirk.

NORTHERN COMFORT The Pitcher Inn's traditional exterior conceals the eccentricity within.

WHEN VERMONT assumes its summer dress and the pistes meld back into a brush of moss and emerald, the Green Mountains earn their name. Route 100, which a few weeks prior was an inching train of Subarus crowned by ski racks, now leads quick into the town of Warren, a place that the more hackneyed guidebooks stamp with the moniker of "quintessential New England." At the Pitcher Inn, an 1850s white-clapboard structure on the Mad River, Vermont tropes come together and are recast in the mold of a Relais & Chateaux property, capped with a killer wine program.

Originally a simple travelers' rest stop at the junction of a cluster of mountain passes, the Pitcher Inn burnt down in the 1990s and rose from the ashes under the direction of architectural bigwig David Sellers. Each of the 11 guest rooms was designed by a different architect tasked with capturing a local theme—the directive seems to have been "money is no object, but go heavy on the whimsy."

"The idea in this room was to create an emperor's duck blind," laughs general manager Ari Sadri, showing off the "Mallard" room. Backlit wood carvings of wildgrass lend a soft, dawn glow to the walls; a plump, wooden Canadian goose soars above the window; a switch near the bed turns on ambient waterfowl noises. There's even a decorative gun rack. Upstairs, an attic room recreates a mountain top fire tower, with stone walls, vintage hiking gear, a "camping" area complete with a wet bar and a mural showing a wraparound view from the summit.

Perhaps the most astonishing room is the "Lodge," a tribute to Vermont's deep roots in mystic social clubs like the Masons and the Elks. A king-sized bed inspired by "Cleopatra's throne" straddles the long axis of the room while the azure ceiling is painted with the star patterns of the heavens on Christmas Eve. At the touch of a remote, a TV slides up from a secret compartment inside a reading lectern plucked from an 1870s meeting house. Between the antiques, ceremonial caps and jackets, and oddments like a reclining couch modeled on one found in King Tut's tomb, the room would skirt the line of kitsch if it weren't so much fun.

From your lodgings, it can take a surprisingly long time to reach the lobby, since every wall and cranny yields a carved bear or historic flag over which to loiter (Sadri jokes that Vermont's antique dealers all go misty at the memory of the charge accounts when the inn was shopping for decor). A basement bar, Tracks, shouldn't be missed for its shuffleboard, pool table and intriguing selection of cocktails and taxidermy, but don't linger. Dinner at the inn's restaurant, 275 Main, is a must. Everyone trumpets local-sourcing these days, but in the Green Mountains this means quail from the slopes opposite your window and lamb fed on the grass in the next valley. It's not experimental cuisine—chef Sue Schickler doesn't deconstruct your grilled tenderloin into its atomic parts. Rather, the focus is on ingredients. The consequent dishes—roast duck with saffron braised fennel, chanterelle and leek risotto with king oyster mushrooms—are as deftly executed as their equivalents in a five-star metropolitan kitchen. And only a fool or a lactose-intolerant stomach would pass on the selection of local cheeses. The wine list, curated by the affable Sadri, won laurels from Wine Spectator, and is worth a rambling exploration—a glass of tawny port with a nibble of panna cotta rounds off the evening with aplomb.

But of course, it's geography that draws visitors to the Mad River Valley. Sugarbush Resort is next door, while the summer months hold the allure of the hiking boot, golf club and fishing pole. Not that you need an excuse. The morning air on the verandah of the inn, taken with a pot of coffee and warm pastries from the kitchen, is reason enough to make the drive. ×××

Put yourself in the capable hands of a consummate sushi chef.

Fuji at Kendall
300 Third St., Cambridge
(617-252-0088)
fujiatkendall.com

STICK AROUND The improvisational sushi offerings, like a salmon sashimi platter, are worth a return visit.

THROUGH SHEER LUCK I discovered the restaurant within the restaurant at Fuji at Kendall. After an initial visit, I left hungry, despite sharing several appetizers and the deluxe sashimi platter for two ($45) with a friend. I expected more of the unfulfilling same upon my return.

Having skimmed the pan-Asian menu as thick as a master's thesis—including pricey generic staples like fried rice ($16), assorted teriyaki entrees ($18-$22) and lo-mein ($16) in addition to mayonnaisy rolls and the requisite nigiri—I thought I had the place pegged as a serviceable, upscalish eatery hoping to net Kendall's tech set with lots of safe choices. Then on the second visit, the chef sent over an amuse bouche of salmon sashimi with red crab, fried taro and yellow tobiko resting on a balsamic reduction cut with curry oil. It was a revelation. Like a speakeasy hidden behind an unmarked door, to gain entry you first have to know it exists. The password is simple, and you can say it from any seat in the glass-fronted dining rooms, although camping at the stone-finished bar will bring you closer to your goal. When your waiter takes your order, just say, "I'll have whatever Jimmy makes me."

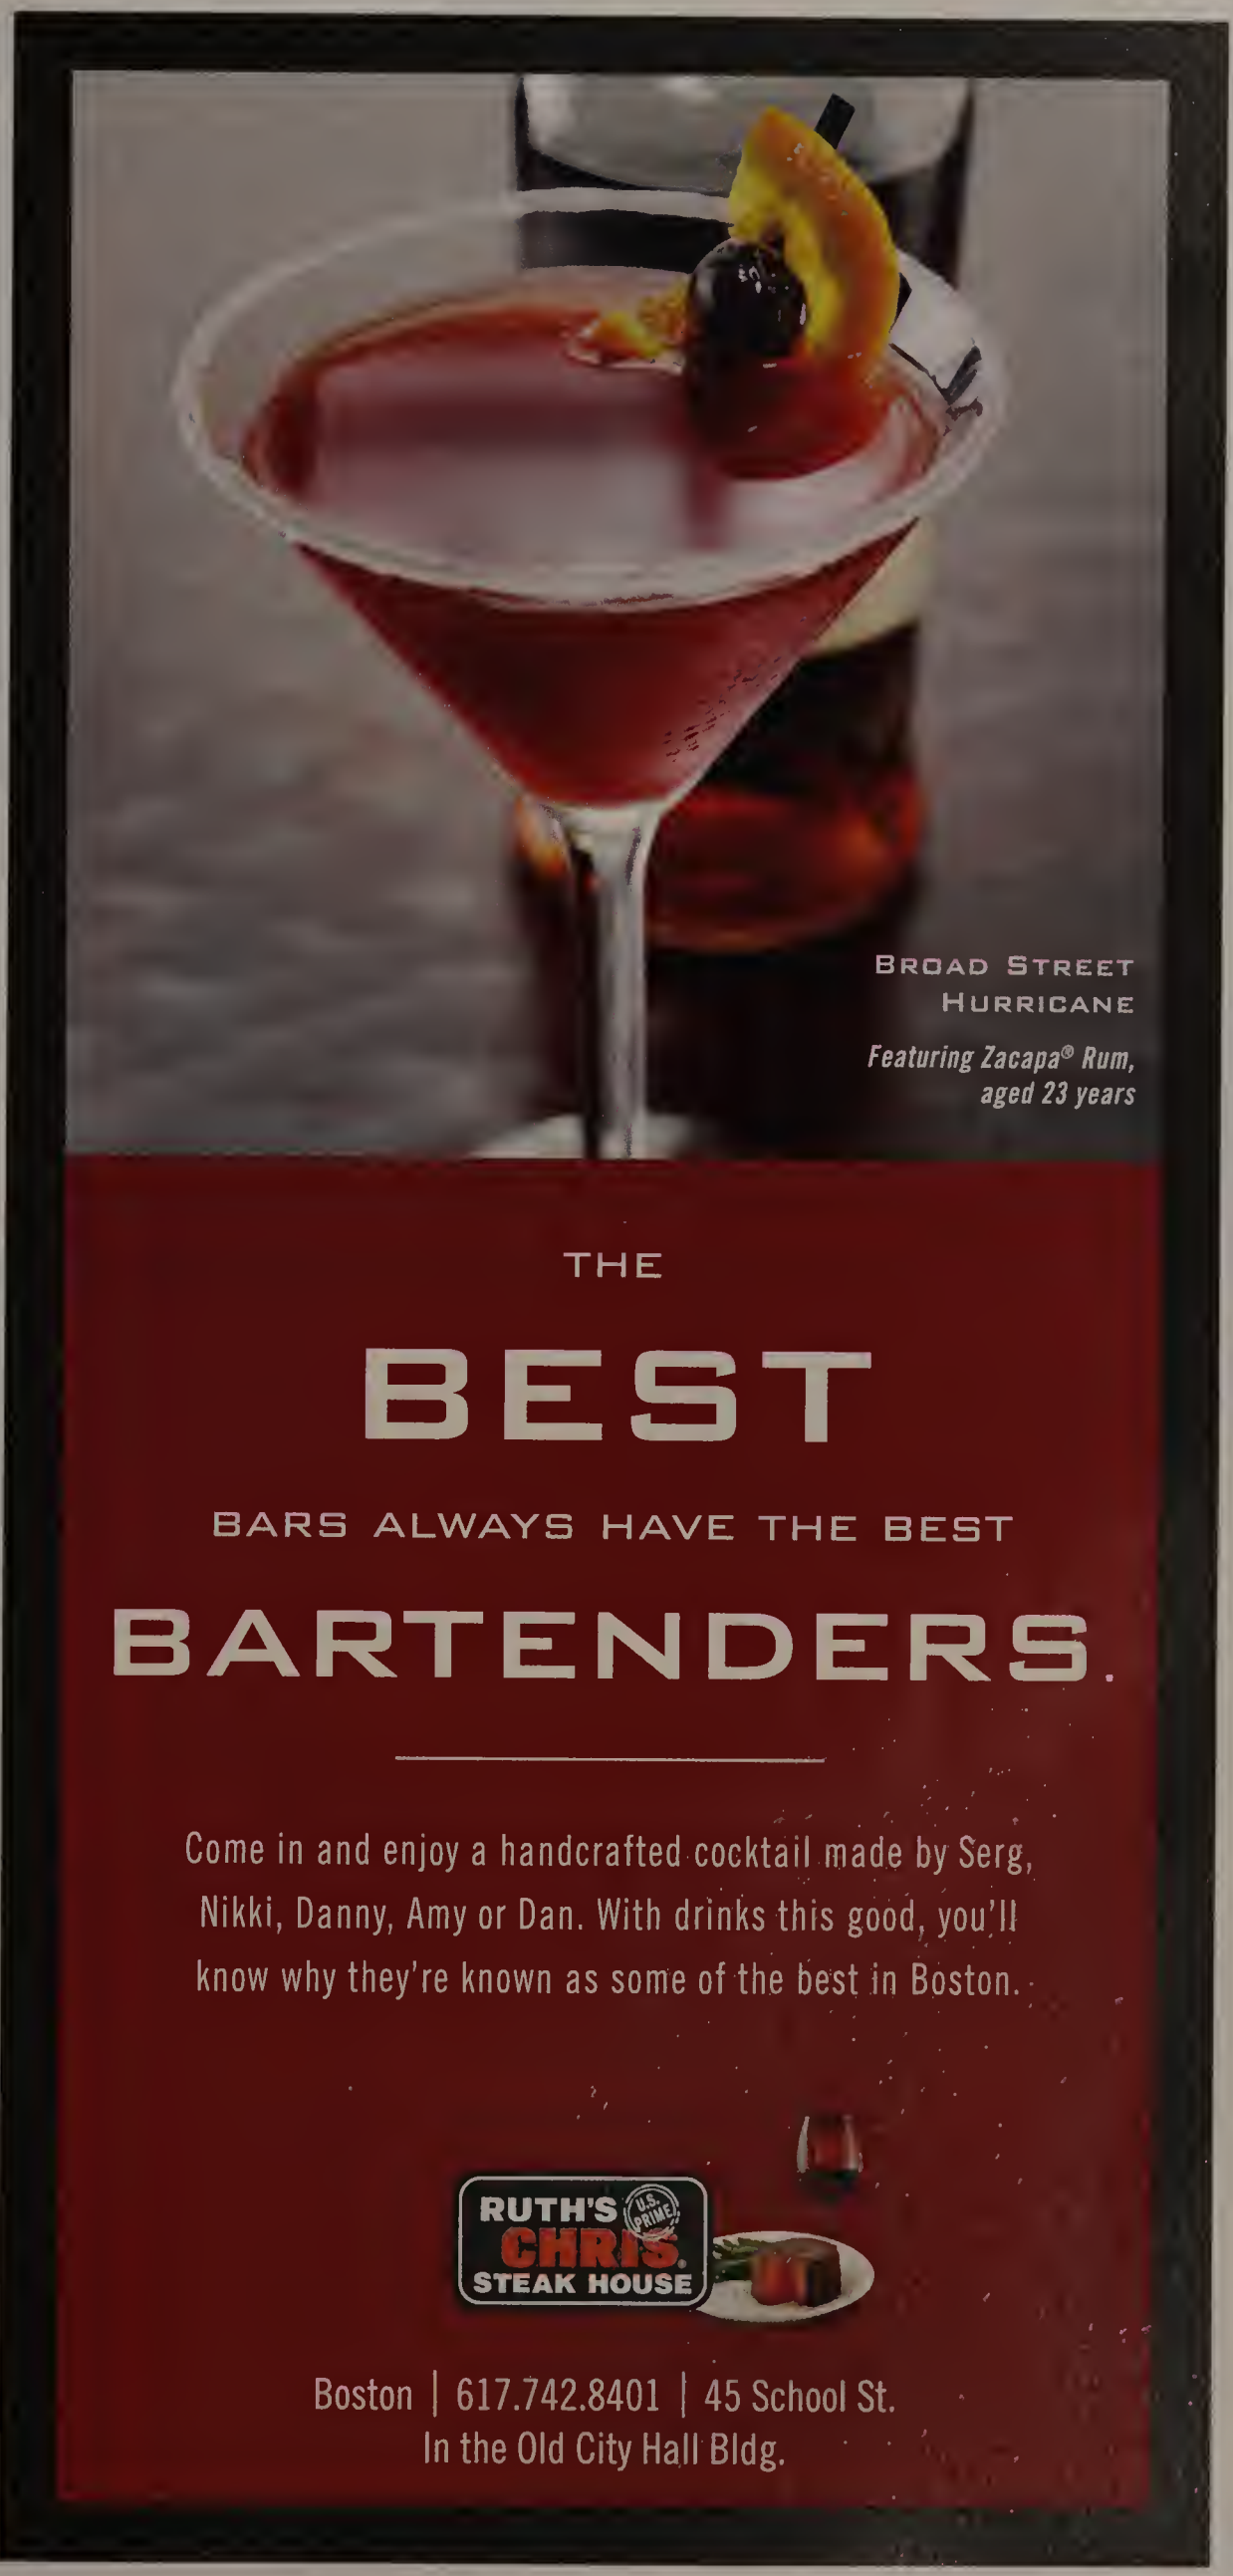
Jimmy Liang is the restaurant's gregarious 34-year-old chef/co-owner, a sushi wunderkind whose story of being trained at 14 by a famous Japanese sensei he refuses to name could've come straight from a Food Network adaptation of The Karate Kid (The Hamachi Kid?). Tall, unverifiable tales aside, what's indisputable are his skills. Having launched his first restaurant, Fuji1546 in Quincy, at the age of 18, Liang now has six in his portfolio. At his Kendall outpost, opened in December, you'll find him occasionally hovering behind executive chef Ming Cao, a cousin he trained to execute the sushi menu. Cao's off-the-cuff creations are a visual treat—slices of fatty tuna curled to the shape of upside-down teacups atop a balsamic reduction undulating with blue flames ($14) or four pieces of fried eel seasoned with soy sauce and wasabi, each dressed with a different citrus ($14). They're beautifully presented and delicious in their own right, but it's Liang's deft touch with fish and seasonings that brings dishes to the heights of flavorful experimentation encountered at O Ya or Oishii.

Emily Knud...

TOAST OF THE TOWN The uni sandwich in its glory

Prices for Liang's improvisations are a steal compared to the regular menu, but they're subject to his whim (hence the importance of sitting at the bar and chatting up the chef). After asking which kinds of sushi I especially like (eel, uni and hamachi) and whether I wanted a small, medium or large amount (medium), he returned with a rectangular platter. On one side sat four pieces of eel, perfectly fried to a light crunch, each resting on slick drizzles of XO-truffle reduction. On the other side, four petals of sashimi gave testimony to a chef at play: two slices of hamachi dotted with green tobiko and dressed with lime shared space with a pair of salmon sashimi dotted with red salmon roe and cuts of mango. This spectacular dish was $10, so I did what any sane person would do. I ordered another, and this time I asked him to supersize it. For $25, he came back with a salad and a sandwich: a huge poki salad of ahi tuna interlaced with red crab accompanied by squares of buttery torched bread with jam, uni and halved blueberries. The toasted bread, sweet fruit and briny sea urchin made for a savory mouthful of revolving flavors.

B.N.'s Picks



Fried eel

Hamachi with lime

Uni sandwich

While Liang's creations deserve at least four stars, the reality is that the rest of the menu doesn't. With prices presumably reformulated for the location, entrees are exorbitant ($7 more for some of the same items served at Quincy's Fuji). The beverage program was similarly steep, especially for the lackluster offerings ($4.50-$9 for Japanese beers). And the waitstaff could be better informed about the sushi they serve. On one visit, my waitress couldn't identify most of the items on the deluxe sashimi platter, despite it being the usual suspects of salmon, tuna, etc. In spite of all this, there's great ambition and potential at Fuji at Kendall. Just be sure to ask for Jimmy by name. ×××

ASK CHERYL

Q: THIS TIME OF YEAR I SUFFER FROM ALLERGIES DUE TO ALL THE POLLEN IN THE AIR. MY EYES ARE ITCHY, MY NOSE RUNS, I'M MISERABLE. I TAKE THE USUAL ALLERGY MEDICATIONS, BUT HATE THE SIDE EFFECTS. A FRIEND OF MINE SUGGESTED ACUPUNCTURE. ACUPUNCTURE, REALLY????

A: YOU BET. Up to 30% of Americans are bothered by seasonal allergies, and acupuncture can be a very effective treatment for providing relief. While spring and summer are the seasons of the year that bring us outdoors, many people are unable to enjoy these warmer months due to uncomfortable symptoms.

While over-the-counter medications often come with unwanted side-effects, such as drowsiness, acupuncture does not. This makes it a welcome alternative for people looking for a new way to combat allergies this season.

Acupuncture is defined as a method of preventing and treating disease, illness, injury or pain by allowing the body to heal naturally and improve the way it functions. This is done by stimulating biologically significant points on the surface of the body with tiny needles. The needles are so tiny that there is no pain or discomfort, and treatments can be performed once a week, or as often as three times a week.

In addition to treating allergies, acupuncture can be extremely effective for many other types of discomfort and pain. Give us a call and we are happy to provide a free consultation.

MEMORY AND LOSS

A poet's tragic yet lyrical memoir

THE TITLE OF KELLE GROOM'S book, with its poetic swish of chaos, reflects her eventful life story. At the age of 19, she's already a heavy drinker and clearly can't care for her newborn son, Tommy. (She remembers shaking a baby she looked after in the sixth grade, and wisely worries about the boy's safety.)

So her aunt and uncle adopt him, but along comes leukemia and his tragic death at 14 months. Groom's life, both inner and outer, becomes painful to read: a hurricane of drink, rehab and relapse; fleeting, fleeing boyfriends; and rape. Yet it's written in a lyrical, dreamy and sometimes wild style. "I cry sensationally, a banshee," she writes,

I Wore the Ocean in the Shape of a Girl
by Kelle Groom

Groom was born in Massachusetts.

shuffling chronology so it reflects her despairing state of mind. Throughout the next 25 years, her anguished regret for her lost child advances like a runaway train. Groom's prose sobers up as she begins to pursue the possibility that Tommy's leukemia stemmed from pollutants in Brockton, where he lived. Eventually, her ghostly motherhood matures, even minus Tommy, as does her appreciation for the pain of her adopting relatives. In the end, she's left with videos of Tommy that bring him back, eerily, to some sort of symbolic life. ✖✖✖

FROM PAGE 47: "How to survive the violence itself as it's happening, that isn't what I mean. The drive to your skull, the way your bones use all their white hardness. Brain singing with neurons like a city at night. Not the siren of adrenaline shots, the frenzy of the body. It's a gift if you live. You're only so big. A man of a certain size, attacking, and it's like being buried alive."

Independent Film Festival Boston 2012

BREAST IN SHOW The Queen of Versailles closes IFFBoston at the Coolidge Corner Theatre on May 2.

AS SOMEONE WHO HAS traveled far and wide, attending fests from New York to Sundance to Sedona, I can state with certainty that Independent Film Festival Boston is always my favorite week of the year. Showcasing an expertly curated crop of buzzed-about indies, documentaries, panels and local up-and-comers, IFFBoston suffers from none of the exclusivity or posturing that plagues most screening shindigs. Now in its 10th year, the festival assembles world-class movies and marquee talent with an eye on community access at affordable prices.

The joke, as it has been for years now, is that the festival doesn't actually take place in Boston. Far away from the city's dumpy multiplexes or that corporate faux art-house in Kendall Square, IFFBoston thrives at the historic Somerville, Brattle and Coolidge Corner theaters. These lovingly restored, independently operated venues prize such antiquated notions as pristine presentation and customer service. Moviegoing too often feels like a grind, but not here.

Program director Adam Roffman and his crew of volunteers have put together an impressive mix of pictures, with an eyepopping list of guests to take your questions after the show.

MUST-SEE SCREENINGS

➔ Opening night kicks off in Somerville with cowriter and This American Life host Ira Glass presenting Mike Birbiglia's Sleepwalk With Me. Fans of the radio program are no doubt already familiar with Birbiglia's self-deprecating stories and his struggles with somnambulism on his journey to a successful stand-up comedy career.

➔ Take your mind off the Red Sox' dismal start with Knuckleball!, a documentary directed by IFFBoston alums Ricki Stern and Annie Sundberg, who were here a couple years back with the unexpectedly insightful Joan Rivers: A Piece of Work. Their new film follows Tim Wakefield during his final year on the mound, chasing that elusive 200th win. Here's hoping the picture provides a fresh perspective on a season we'd all rather forget.

➔ 2 Days in New York, the loopy sequel to Julia Delpy's 2007 directorial debut 2 Days in Paris, is hilarious. Once again starring as an endearingly neurotic photographer, the follow-up finds cowriter/director Delpy living in the Big Apple with a new beau played by Chris Rock. Her ill-behaved family comes to visit for the weekend, and it's a revelation to watch Rock play the straight man to a gaggle of wacky Frenchies. The effervescent Delpy will be in attendance for the screening, and hopefully I'll get a second chance to hit on her, instead of just staring slack-jawed and mumbling like I did a few months ago when our paths crossed at a Sundance bar.

➔ Local boy Denis Leary is back in town with Burn, a documentary he produced and narrated about Detroit firefighters. But after sitting through umpteen seasons of Rescue Me, it might be difficult not to ask the former comic if 9/11 did more for his career or for Rudy Giuliani's.

➔ Old friend of the festival Bobcat Goldthwait returns with God Bless America, a scabrous media satire in which a sad sack (deftly played by Mad Men's Joel Murray, brother to Bill) is diagnosed with an inoperable brain tumor. Naturally, he goes on a cross-country killing spree, cold-bloodedly executing reality-show stars, cable-TV news personalities and Tea Party activists. Much like Goldthwait's World's Greatest Dad, which brought down the house at IFFBoston in 2009, this is not a movie for the faint of heart. But you'll be surprised at just how thoughtful (and soft-spoken) the former Police Academy sidekick turns out to be. Dude's got a lot on his mind.

➔ Closing night is once again in Coolidge Corner with the documentary The Queen of Versailles. Director Lauren Greenfield's Sundance sensation begins as the stuff of tongue-clucking reality-TV fodder, following the travails of a gauche, billionaire couple attempting to build Earth's tackiest mansion. But then that damn recession kicks in, and the movie exerts a weird empathetic pull as we watch billionaires become millionaires, until eventually we're all in the same boat. Any movie in which piles of dog crap on the carpet become a metaphor for America's economic decline is automatically worth watching, and The Queen of Versailles is a worthy finish to a week of adventurous cinematic offerings.

Miike Snow forms a dance party with a stress on spontaneity.

Miike Snow
plays at House of Blues on April 29.

FRONTMAN ANDREW WYATT may serve as the focal point of electro-pop trio Miike Snow. But on the group's current tour, there's a monster looming behind him. At the controls of a huge synthesizer station dubbed "the Blob," the Swedish production duo of Christian Karlsson and Pontus Winnberg now share center stage.

"Our tour manager hates us for it," Winnberg says of the 9-foot-wide hexagonal structure made of digital samplers and old synth parts, some bought from disco-era pioneer Giorgio Moroder. "That machine doesn't exist in the stores. That's why we built it and then turned it into something we thought looks pretty cool."

The Blob is not only sculpturesque in form, but it also sculpts sounds and beats. "It's funny, 'cause that's how we usually refer to both our songwriting and production," Winnberg says. "We come up with an idea that turns into a song, and the rest is sculpting."

> "We come up with an idea that turns into a song, and the rest is sculpting."

Before Miike Snow, Karlsson and Winnberg had carved a sharp track record as producers under the pseudonym Bloodshy & Avant. They crafted hits for Kylie Minogue and Britney Spears, even winning a Grammy Award as cowriters of Spears' hit "Toxic."

"We wanted to do more stuff for ourselves and not work for others," Winnberg says. The duo joined forces with American singer/producer Wyatt to form a band. "It became very evident that this was it. So we just turned everything [else] down." They named the group after an engineer friend, but doubled a vowel in a nod to Japanese film director Takashi Miike.

A euphoric, airy blend of electronic pop and dance rock, Miike Snow's music is playful. "We're not at all genre-specific—not deliberately. We've never talked genres in that way," Winnberg says from Palm Springs, Calif., where the band was appearing at Coachella. "After living with the music, especially in the live act, we have a mutual idea of what Miike Snow is, and it's what we call 'Snow-ish.' We might say, 'This isn't Snow-ish enough,' or 'We might need to Snow-ify this.' But that's kind of abstract."

The group's breadth has grown more sweeping on its second outing, Happy to You. The album ranges from the piano-spiked house rave-ups "Devil's Work" and "Paddling Out" to the moody "Black Tin Box," featuring a vocal by Lykke Li (who recently joined Miike Snow, Peter Bjorn and John and other Swedish conspirators in launching the indie-label Ingrid).

Often with producers in the dance-music world, it's all about the records, with live shows as an afterthought. But Winnberg says, "It's quite the opposite in our case, especially if you look at sales. We're a much bigger live band.... The feedback that we get from the audience and the way we [play live], we take that back into the studio and mold it for a while, then take that experience back on the road."

Adding to that circle of spontaneity, the trio—augmented on tour by another keyboardist and a kit drummer—also avoids using prerecorded tracks on computer.

"It's weird these days because most people have [tracks], and even when we work in the studio, the jam perspective is always there," Winnberg says. "If you have a predetermined way of playing a song, you kind of lock yourself into a little cage where you have to play it more or less the same every night."

Not so with Miike Snow, which plays at House of Blues on April 29. "That kind of opens it up a little," he says. "The risk and danger that something can go wrong is also inspiring.

"That also goes for the machines," Winnberg continues. Technology adds its own layer of unpredictability, even if you're not wrestling with the Blob. "They're not a hundred percent reliable. Sometimes they do stuff that sucks, and sometimes they do stuff that's actually pretty interesting. It's a dangerous mix." ✖✖✖

LONDON CALLING

Musings from across the Pond

I'VE WORN LAPEL PINS ON MY suits for years. They're decorative, colorful and a whole lot cheaper than sticking a flower in your buttonhole every day. (A flower in 2012? The age of dressing down?) My little lapel pin reads "Games." I bought it at a London flea market years ago for 10 pence. It's a schoolboy pin, the kind given out as an award to prove that the boy played cricket, rugby or soccer. A lot of what I think about are the various games of life. So I advertise it.

In London you still see men in pin-striped suits wearing shirts made by shirtmakers to the Prince of Wales, shoes by Lobb the boot maker and accessorizing with furled umbrellas and proper hats, even bowlers. At lunch they have their whiskeys neat, lethal punch, gin and tonics, carafes of claret. Then they go back to work. I'm writing this now in my hotel room watching barges chug by my window on the Thames. I've just had one of those fat, drunken lunches in a gentleman's club that's almost several hundred years old. Although you may think the British are stuffy and formal, most of my friends here say, "We're bawdy and randy. We thought it was a joke when you got so upset about Bill Clinton and Monica Lewinsky."

An old pal of mine, Lord Rodney I call him, is always sardonic and amusing. "I was shipped off early to boarding school," he told me, "as were all of my chums, children really, raised mostly by nannies. Father was distant, as if he didn't remember that I was his son. But the night before school he took me for a walk in our gardens and gave me my first advice in life. 'You're going off, Rodney. Well, remember this: When the older boys offer to take you to play squash, don't ever go.' But he never explained what he really meant. Stiff upper lip and all that."

Another longtime friend, who belongs to several of the London clubs, added, "I rowed at Oxford. For years, oarsmen had a black-tie dinner at our club, with many toasts and most of us three sheets to the wind. After cheese and port and brandy, we'd all split up into teams of four. Then we had the waiters move all of the chairs into a different room. Each team was given a broomstick. We would place the broomstick between our legs and, on a signal, run backwards around the table. We'd run around the trestle table, bumping and elbowing each other for position, simulating the movement of crew shells. Except that these races involved physical contact. We fell down once last year—dancing pumps are slippery—and old Reginald broke five ribs. But Reggie pulled himself up and insisted we race on. That attitude was how we beat Hitler."

There's a rich history in English theater and literature along these naughty lines. There's Shakespeare's bawdiness, and the Elizabethan revenge tragedies were full of illicit sex. British politicians have resigned by the score because of extramarital adventures. And the British also love farce. Think of the Three Stooges or the Marx Brothers chasing attractive women in their lingerie and you have Benny Hill, Beyond the Fringe, Monty Python. In this vein, a new play, modeled on past farces, called One Man, Two Guvnors opens on Broadway this spring. Try to see it. It's hysterical.

I was on this trip with a group from the Huntington Theatre. Their great artistic director, Peter DuBois, is opening a play in London, and he had arranged tickets to a number of different performances, including some at several experimental theaters. DuBois got experts from The Times, International Herald Tribune and the BBC to give talks on culture and politics. After one play, we had the playwright as our speaker. He sought our advice for changes in words or scenes for a New York production he was planning. "I'm interested in words or phrases that work in London, but might not translate well for American audiences," he said. "For instance, I know that Americans are kind of prudish. How about the word 'dickhead' in the play? Would that fly?" Three women in our group each yelled out, "'Dickhead,' we love it!"

The playwright smiled. "Maybe I misjudged Bostonians. Right. 'Dickhead' stays."

Wandering London is a delight. The city is loaded with bookstores, and the bibliophiles who work in them have strong opinions on their wares. My favorite is Slightly Foxed in South Kensington; an old-fashioned oasis with clerks who tell you quirky stories about the authors. The name of the shop is a term describing a used-book condition, meaning slightly damaged in some way. It's a good description of how I feel about myself.

As you wander London, don't miss the church of St. Martin-in-the-Fields, which is just off Trafalgar Square. I blundered into a quartet playing Bach, and I sat in a seat in the back of the church reserved for "the keeper of the pews." No one moved me, and I felt transported back in time. Across the street is the National Portrait Gallery. All museums in London are free to the public, but in this place, I always push a few dollars into the donation box. In two hours of wandering, I mostly lingered in the Tudor rooms. The written descriptions next to each painting are the best insights into any museum's contents that I know. Henry the VIII and his queens and courtiers come alive, and you imagine that you're in their times. It reminds you that buzzwords and characters endlessly evolve, but human nature never changes.

I asked a cabbie what three things I should always remember about London. "Well," he answered, "we've always enjoyed spankings. And we love old ladies, like the Queen. And biscuits." ×××

GOLF, THE UNFAIR WAY

Testing out cheats in a gentleman's game

Read more at improper.com/blogs.

I USED TO TAKE GOLF SERIOUSLY. I practiced. I had my swing analyzed. I spent one summer as a groundskeeper at a fancy golf course, waking at 5 am to rake sand traps. I might have returned the following year had the offer not been rescinded for breaking two mowers and stunt-driving the carts. It was around that time that I revised my attitude toward the game.

To excel at golf requires terrific amounts of money and time spent brandishing a deadly weapon while strangers critique your hip alignment. On the other hand, accepting mediocrity frees you from that pressure and from ever evolving into the sort of person who keeps a foam putting green in his office. Abandon the pipe dream of consistent performance and the good walk spoiled becomes the more satisfying Sunday drive, perhaps with a cold beer in the cup holder. My game transformed once I embraced the life of the duffer. However, I understood if I ever wanted to beat anyone decent, I'd have to become a cheater.

Cheating is woven into the fabric of golf. The only players who don't scribble the odd numerical fib on the scorecard are the ones who occasionally sign giant novelty checks. If your opponent hooks a drive into a nearby elm, it's unseemly not to grant a mulligan. There are now technological aids for bending the rules, but while no one would blink if you pulled the latest titanium, offset, adjustable driver from your bag, if you rest your ball on anything other than an antiquated splinter of wood, eyebrows will rise.

Before my first round of the year, I picked up three packs of newfangled tees. There was the Brush T ($8), which gives the appearance that you're prepping your Titleist for a shave, and the 4 Yards More ($7) and Pride Professional Offset ($6), both of which feature small prongs that hold your ball aloft like a precious jewel. The idea is to provide more distance through less friction, and while there may have been appreciable length added to my drives, it was only serving to deposit my ball further into the woods. Plus, when you shoot a 57 on the front nine, doing so with the aid of science only increases the embarrassment.

The perfect setup

I began smearing ChapStick onto my 3-wood like I was greasing a baking pan.

While silly, the USGA-approved tees didn't technically count as cheats, so on the back nine I went old-school. It's a hustler's trick to apply a lubricant like Vaseline or spit onto the driver face, as it's supposed to reduce the spin on the ball, turning your brutal slice into something that may actually see the fairway. Before teeing off, I smeared ChapStick on my 3-wood like I was greasing a baking pan. The tactic showed modest results. Yet the tacky petroleum also clearly showed how poorly I was striking the ball, as viscous, lip-balm kisses popped up around the face's heel and toe. The evidence revealed my lack of skill, but I was nonetheless winning the game, largely due to the crafty strategy of playing friends whose golf talents are (pardon the phrase) subpar.

A week later I faced a steeper challenge: a seasoned player who would display no mercy—my girlfriend. Wanting to up my fraudulent game, I went on the Internet for the kind of equipment not sold at reputable retailers. First there were the Intech Anti-Slice tees ($5 for five), which cup the ball like a jai alai stick to create a launching pad for straight drives. The thin plastic backings only last a single swing, so I waited until the seventh hole, the course's most difficult, before I planted one into the tee box. After I launched a rocket down the fairway, a nearby, skilled, golfer asked, "Who said cheaters never prosper?"

Less successful were the Polara Ultimate Straight XS Self Correcting Golf Balls ($35 for 12). With a specialized dimple pattern, the ball is designed to self-correct in the air, reducing the likelihood of a hook or slice. It also feels like you're spanking a rock, and the Polara will often crash like an asteroid yards in front of your target. After thumping one for most of the front nine I found myself three strokes back, so I put it away (by unintentionally shanking it into the bushes).

I also stopped cheating. The schemes became too much to think about: which ball, which tee, which ChapStick was safe to use on my lips. The loss of authenticity is disheartening, as you never know if a good shot would've flown as true without the autopilot. Plus, losing with unfair advantages means you really stink, so cheating adds pressure, and pressure is what I decided to drop from my game years ago.

Unshackled from my chicanery, I actually won the back nine. It was a victory both minor and ignoble, but it was genuine. For the duffer, it's better to be bad with no apologies than triumphant with transgressions. ✖✖✖

THE RAZR'S EDGE

A renewed respect for a trusty Motorola can't mitigate smartphone compulsion.

Read more at improper.com/blogs.

I LIVE ON THE WILD SIDE. Sometimes I do the grapevine around my house even though I know this will anger my dog and cause him to attack me. There's a reason that discount meat is cheap, but I know a bargain when I see one. And, of course, I never buy the insurance when I get a cell phone. If Ernest Hemingway were still alive, he'd be both reverent and threatened by my overt masculinity.

But when you ride the lightning each and every day, eventually you're gonna get burned. And that's what happens when I smash my iPhone screen. One second it's on the arm of my rocking chair, the next it's on the pavement. Why am I using a rocking chair on pavement? I told you, I get crazy.

I trundle myself to the nearest Verizon store to request a new phone. The guy there tells me that I'm not eligible to upgrade for another year. Which means that replacing my phone will cost $650. That doesn't sound appealing, so I devise a new plan: Try to get the iPhone fixed, and in the meantime go to my bench. Which means digging out the Motorola Razr.

The Razr is like Doug Flutie at the end of his career—older, a little undersized, but still ready to get the job done. I tell the Verizon guy that I'm activating the Razr. "Best phone ever made," he replies.

Perhaps you recall a storm in December 2007, when the good folks who plow the Mass Pike decided to try a new strategy called, "Don't plow until the snow stops falling." It took me six hours to drive from Burlington to Southie. I have photos of that storm on this phone. Sure, the photos have the crisp resolution of an ancient cave painting, but the Razr hails from the distant epoch when a phone was for talking. And in that department, the Razr handily trumps the iPhone. The keypad is always right there when you need it, the reception is great and a Razr won't butt-dial and leave a three-minute message that causes your friends to wonder if you're trying to escape a coffin.

My electronic regression carries additional benefits. No longer am I subject to fits of rage induced by a Words With Friends game where my opponent steals the move that was going to net me 87 points. (And yes, Ted, I consider what you did to be theft. You should be thrown in Jail With No Friends.) There's no more compulsive glassy-eyed perusal of my e-mail while standing in line at the grocery store. No checking the weather instead of stepping outside.

Stripped of today's technology, I contemplate how thoroughly intolerant I am of a moment's boredom. With an iPhone, I check Facebook while brushing my teeth. On planes, I can't wait to hit 10,000 feet so I can fire up some Angry Birds. Next time you're at the gym, take a look around and note how many people are exercising and how many are sitting idly, necks craned in thrall to the small screen. I think we're on the verge of a class-action lawsuit from people whose necks are stuck at a 45-degree angle, like when Steve Martin's customers all went cross-eyed from his Opti-Grab eyeglasses in The Jerk.

My brother-in-law recently smashed his iPhone screen, but it still worked well enough that he continued using it. Said brother-in-law is a surgeon. Eventually a shard of glass lodged in his swiping thumb and caused an infection. If you want to understand why a share of Apple stock is worth more than jar of albino narwhal tears, think about that: Their product is so good that a person whose livelihood depends on his manual dexterity will jab his fingers onto a plate of fractured glass to use it.

For my part, a strip mall computer-repair place has my iPhone up and running two days after I destroyed it. Sure, it now has a human hair under the screen and the button at the bottom works on roughly every fifth try, but the angry birds are once again assailing the entrenched pigs. Pandora is playing me both 311 and artists whose sonic signature is similar to that of 311. I'm back in battle against the cheating and dishonorable Ted, just as sure as "djin" is a word. Oh iPhone, I know you're not good for me but I couldn't stay away.

It's another day before I realize that the initial screen damage somehow rendered the earpiece inoperable, so when someone calls me I can't hear what they're saying. The computer place says they can fix it for another $20, but I don't think I'll bother. I don't really use it for phone calls anyway. ✖✖✖

WELCOME TO RED SOX SEASON

3 CELTICS PLAYOFF QUESTIONS

Can They Stay Healthy? Ray Allen's ankle. Greg Stiemsma's foot. Paul Pierce's toe and thigh. Mickael Pietrus' knee and head. Rajon Rondo's back and wrist. Brandon Bass' knee. Marquis Daniels' dreads. These are all real concerns, and you can bet one, if not many, will come to affect the Celtics in the playoffs. (Unless we can get the whole team to Germany for a blood transfusion.)

Will the Heat Click? Miami was uneven down the stretch, leaving the door open to another playoff collapse. BUT, if they somehow figure it out and rediscover that painfully annoying swagger, it's bad news for everyone. Well, except the Heat and all 17 of their fans.

Is It Really Over? We've been saying this for three years, but (thanks to Avery Bradley's emergence) this has to be the end for the Big 3. Not a bad run, eh? Five years, five division titles, one fancy ring. Sure, it could've been better. But it was always more than enough. Long live Ubuntu!

2 BIG GAMES

(BECAUSE IT'S NEVER TOO EARLY TO OBSESS ABOUT THE NFL)

OCTOBER 7: Broncos at Patriots By then, we'll be accustomed to seeing Peyton Manning in a Broncos jersey, but it'll still be weird the first time he takes the field in Foxborough. (Not so weird when he throws a pick six on the opening drive.)

NOVEMBER 22: Patriots at Jets This year, spend Thanksgiving with a freaky foot licker, the second coming of Jesus and every single one of Antonio Cromartie's children. It's Pats vs. Jets. It's prime time. It's going to be insane! I can't think of a better way to honor our long lost Pilgrim gods.

4 DATES TO WATCH

4/25: The would-be Game 7 for Bruins vs. Capitals. What do you say we all wear Mitt Romney masks? Just to mess with Braden Holtby's head.

4/26: Welcome to the NFL Draft, where the Patriots select... a 2013 first-round pick and two future second-rounders.

4/28: It's finally here—the first night of the NBA Playoffs. Or as the refs call it: "The day we stop taking our meds."

5/5: It's the fastest two minutes in sports, and the only two minutes you care about horse racing—the 138th Kentucky Derby.

5 EARLY SOX STORIES

GONE BATTY Alfredo Aceves

Shoulder to Cry On Forget clubhouse drama, Jacoby Ellsbury's shoulder is far and away the most important story of the season. He's the Red Sox' Rajon Rondo, but for the next six weeks, Ellsbury will be sitting on his ass. Can the offense survive? What about his horny teenage fan base? Either way, this isn't good for the brick-selling business.

The $142-Million-Dollar Man Carl Crawford keeps slipping on his journey back from wrist surgery, and now he has a bum elbow to boot. Does anyone else have a bad feeling here? I know, it's early. But it's not THAT early, and we're still waiting for him to turn the corner. We've been waiting for over a year! (Meanwhile, John Henry adjusts his glasses and squeals, "Eh! I tooold you so.")

Call Him Closer The Sox have a reputation as an unlikable team—and for good reason. But Alfredo Aceves stands apart. How do you not love this guy? 1. He's the consummate pro. 2. He's out of his mind! Did you know he wears No. 91 as a tribute to Dennis Rodman? Or that he once killed a rhino with his bare hands? OK, I made up the second one, but the Rodman part is real, as is the legend of Alfredo Aceves.

The Bobby V. Show As anticipated, Bobby Valentine is making headlines this season. Is that his fault? Is it more on the media? I don't know, but I like it. I'm a Valentine fan, and I hope he gets a fair crack before the players tune him out, the media breaks his will or the owners start leaking every skeleton in his surely ridiculous closet.

Clubhouse of Horrors The Sox may have issues with their manager, but things aren't much better among themselves. In fact, they're reportedly still fighting about last year! If that's the case, enough is enough—the front office needs to act. I don't know if that means trading Kevin Youkilis, trading Josh Beckett, or tying Wally to the Coke bottle and ritually sacrificing him, but it's time to exorcise the clubhouse demons.

ONE FOR THE CUP

Deadlines and the NHL schedule made it hard to cover the Bruins this issue (so much will change between my writing and your reading). But after three games against Washington, there are two things I know for sure: 1. Alex Ovechkin is at least 75 percent cyborg. 2. Bruins in six.

Soroff On MARCUS WAINWRIGHT AND DAVID NEVILLE

The founders of Rag & Bone talk style.

IN 2002, MARCUS WAINWRIGHT AND DAVID NEVILLE, friends from boarding school in England, founded the fashion label Rag & Bone, which recently opened a boutique on Newbury Street. They named the company after a British term for one of the earliest forms of recycling: a man who drove his cart around town collecting salvaged goods to be reused. Wainwright and Neville now operate out of Manhattan, creating bespoke, stylish collections. In 2007, they won the Swarovski Award for emerging talent in menswear, and in 2010, they were named Menswear Designers of the Year by the Council of Fashion Designers of America. They are both married and live in New York with their wives and sons.

Jonathan Soroff: So which one of you is rag and which one is bone?
David Neville: I always say bone. I don't know why. I think of Marcus as more of the rag. [Laughs.]

Don't you think it's a great name for a line of underwear?
Marcus Wainwright: The bone might be a little strange. Depends on where you put the logo.

DN: A Bostonian, of course. Mark Wahlberg.

You're the umpteenth British fashion label to open on Newbury Street...
DN: That doesn't make us feel very special.

Is Boston an Anglophile city?
MW: Yes. It's the closest thing to England we could find. It looks like England. There are a lot of English names.
DN: But the accent's very different. Our first ever employee was from Massachusetts, and so we've had a chance to get used to it.

Ted Baker or Paul Smith?
MW: Paul Smith.

Are you guys American-o-philes?
DN: Yeah. I think we're adopted Americans.

Is your dressed-down look on purpose?
DN: The looks we tend to wear in the office are a lot more lairy. That's an English word that means sort of cheeky.

What three adjectives would you use to describe the Rag & Bone look?
MW: Cool, downtown and effortless.

You met at an English boarding school. So who shagged whom?
MW: [Laughs.] I think that's a big myth about English boarding schools.

Mario Testino wanted you to be gay!
MW: He tried to convince us we were a gay couple.
DN: He wanted to take some nudes of us, which we considered for maybe half a second.

So David, you followed Marcus to New York to escape a woman?
DN: The details on that are not really to be divulged. Let's just say that I needed a change of pace, and I'm extremely glad I moved to New York.

Any plans to do formalwear?
MW: We do make tuxedos. [They made Jimmy Fallon's for the Emmys.] We didn't really start out with jeans as a brand. As a company, the concept started out with a pair of jeans but we're not a denim brand. We've always done a full line. We now do women's and shoes and accessories, as well.

Something you'd never design?
DN: Square-toed shoes.
MW: And it's unlikely that I'll ever design a boot-cut jean.

What would you never be caught dead wearing?
MW: Flares.
DN: I had a pair once. During my Glastonbury days.
MW: How did they look?
DN: I wore them with beads. I had a couple of moments in my youth.

Most annoying thing about the fashion business?
DN: There are a lot of annoying things about any business, but the fact that we don't have an answer to that is probably a good sign. What we do is fun.

If you were on Absolutely Fabulous, who'd be Patsy and who'd be Edina?
MW: Aren't they as bad as each other? I think David's got much more of a partying habit than I do.
DN: Mark holds his drink better than I do.
MW: That's true.

Are your sons and wives friends?
MW: They see quite a bit of each other in the summer. But by the end of the week, Nev and I are sort of sick of each other, so we try not to converse on weekends.

Is it hard to work together when you're such good friends?
DN: No. It's good. Obviously, there are potential pitfalls, which we've managed to avoid, thankfully.

Who gets on the other's nerves more often?
MW: I'm probably the more annoying one. I complain a lot. About pretty much everything I can think of. I'm bad cop. He's good cop.

Do you try to appeal to the broadest possible audience or fashionistas?
DN: We try to balance art and commerce.

One thing a man should never wear?
MW: Aside from square-toed shoes and boot-cut jeans? I don't want to name names, but I'm not a big fan of a very popular brand of jewelry. And I think certain expensive Italian boat shoes are really terrible.

What should every man have in his wardrobe?
DN: A handmade suit. It's a question of having a tailor make you something you really love, and the craftsmanship that goes into it, along with the fact that it doesn't come with a logo or a label.

One thing you'd like to see your label on that you don't?
MW: Underwear. ×××

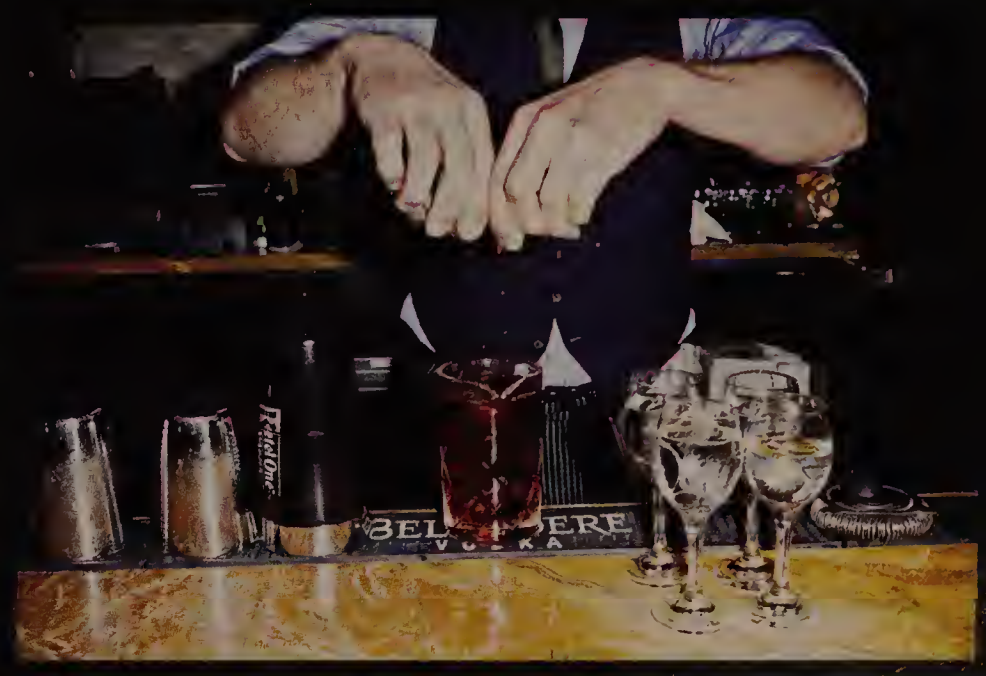
THE GREAT IMPROPER BARTENDING COMPETITION

THE HALL OF FAMERS:
JOHN GERTSEN, JOSH CHILDS AND JOY RICHARD

SIX BARTENDERS GO IN. ONE COMES OUT DRENCHED IN GLORY. AND RUM.

THE RISING STARS:
NICOLE LEBEDEVITCH, SAM TREADWAY AND KELLY UNDA



MAGAZINE EDITORS LOVE TO CLASSIFY THINGS.

It's in our blood, like making puns so dire they cause brain contusions. ("What's a good headline for the wine column?" "How about 'Grape Expectations'?" "Genius!"). So when asked, "What's the best appetizer in town?" or "How do you solve the Middle East situation?" we can't answer, "Everything is subjective." We must rise to the bait. (The grilled octopus at UpStairs on the Square. And, um, Palestinian statehood?)

So it seemed like a good idea to hoist the banner of sweeping generality and definitively name the finest bartender in the city. Culling three mixologists from our Hall of Fame, we invited them along with three rising stars to the Great Improper Bartending Competition. The veteran tier included Josh Childs of Silvertone Bar & Grill, Parlor Sports and Trina's Starlite Lounge, John Gertsen of Drink and Joy Richard of Franklin Restaurant Group. Our upstarts were Nicole Lebedevitch of the Hawthorne, Sam Treadway of Backbar and Kelly Unda of Harvest and Citizen Public House & Oyster Bar. There were two elimination rounds, with the survivor from each tier brandishing his or her shaker in the final.

To judge the proceedings, there was Improper cocktail columnist Lindsey Canant, the bartending scene's answer to Solon of Athens Brother Cleve, bar and beverage director at Big Night Entertainment Group Joe O'Connor, and myself. Our host was Red Lantern, a restaurant that combines an evolved cocktail menu with the design aesthetic of a Vinaya monastery. It was an ideal setting on account of a roomy, 40-foot bar, a robust vodka selection and plenty of ambient Buddhas in case anyone caught a case of stage jitters. Also, the kitchen was stocked with ingredients should someone spontaneously invent, say, a feta cheese Manhattan. ✦

ROUND ONE

Having shaken out their aprons and arranged, surgeon-like, their mixing instruments on the bartop, the competitors are ready. In the middle of the bar stand two glass bowls overflowing with bouquets of sage, rosemary, sorrel, even pedestrian basil—enough to fuel an Italian restaurant for a week. Herbs are a factor in the first challenge, in which the bartenders have 15 minutes to concoct a drink using Privateer Silver Reserve rum, a spirit that lends itself happily to infusions.

The bar erupts in motion. Richard is plucking at the herb bunches, Unda's hands are a blur. Gertsen, groomed so sharp even his cowlick has an edge, is chilling what I take to be port glasses. Lebedevitch stirs furiously. They're as focused as Formula 1 drivers, except they've got open containers.

Six minutes in, Gertsen asks if he can present his drink. "It's a variation on the Palmetto," he explains. In a glass rinsed with green Chartreuse, he combines two parts rum with one part Martini & Rossi vermouth and a dash of orange bitters. The result is a warm, brandy-colored drink with a complex nose—an elegant sipper on a brisk spring evening. Judging on a scale of 1–10 for presentation, flavor, creativity and use of ingredient, he scores 132/160 between the four judges, with highest marks on flavor. Next is Childs, whose variation on the Toronto replaces rye with rum and adds Averna, orange bitters and a long orange peel. It tastes clear and light, with the herbal nip of the Averna filling out the rum's floral and sugar cane notes. It scores him 124/160, with big numbers from use of ingredient. Last of the Hall of Famers is Richard, who says, "I wanted to play off the herbal and vanilla notes in the rum," so she infuses it with sorrel. Adding pineapple juice to lime, along with Bénédictine, green Chartreuse and Lillet, her concoction has a round, fruity nose and tastes lightly citrusy. High scores all around, especially on creativity, netting her a total of 135 points.

Sam Treadway leads the rising star tier with his take on a Chartreuse swizzle, which he calls "Dreaming of Sage." Like Richard, he combines pineapple and lime (raising suggestions of cribbing), but adds sage leaves, almond syrup and Angostura bitters to the Privateer. Served on crushed ice, it's an intricate but chuggable summer cocktail. High grades for presentation and flavor, tallying 128. Lebedevitch, for her part, veers into a different flavor profile with a rum Manhattan, muddled with rosemary. "It says good-bye to winter, hello to spring, with the light rum carrying heavy flavors." Hungarian Zwack liqueur yields a medicine-cabinet kick, leavened by Angostura bitters and orange. It works, especially in the flavor category, winning 130 points. Last up is Unda, whose take on a Dark and Stormy blends rosemary-infused syrup with orange bitters and Lillet. The sweetness of the syrup isn't quite undercut by the bitters, while the rosemary toys gently with the rum's notes of basil and anise. Earning high scores in presentation, Unda clocks in at 118 points.

The judges announce the first round of eliminations. Childs retires from his tier, and Unda from hers. There's much back-slapping, a few faux triumphalist cheers and embarrassed smiles from the judges. Then Childs and Unda cross the bar to watch their friends grapple with the next test.

Drunken Aside #1:
I haven't always been tolerant of rum. As a youth, I was too insecure to see past the prejudices aroused by umbrella drinks. Long delvings into sherry made me realize that sweetness doesn't bar seriousness, but I still think that liquors, like wines, have personalities. Whiskies, even white ones, are like gentlemen with deliberate facial hair and earnest opinions. Gin is a weathered beauty who clings to her sex appeal despite some telling sag and a heavy hand on the perfume spritz. Vodka, no matter the label or flavoring agents, is an approachable blonde. Tequila (except sweet añejo, which is a dapper, overly-mannered playboy) is a hot-eyed dancing girl with an alarming secret (she's got a penis). Absinthe, of course, is a psycho with a hockey mask and a tire iron.

ROUND TWO

The first round was a test of creativity, so the second is a measure of craft. The bartenders' task is to mix the perfect Ramos gin fizz, one of the most grueling cocktails in the handbook. It isn't a hassle on account of requiring smoked ice cubes, pork foam or other fripperies—the salient liquids are cream, orange flower water, lemon and lime juice, soda water and egg whites. Rather, to achieve an ideal, velvet texture, the drink demands several minutes of rabid shaking. This is a girlie drink for the strong.

I announce the challenge and the bartenders leap to their ice and gin bottles. Except Richard, who looks a little blank and starts a muttered conversation with Childs.

In moments, the four competitors are giving a fair approximation of a maraca ensemble. Lebedevitch exhibits a willowy club night style; Richard, in a tank top, looks fiercely aerobic, flexing her tattoos. Treadway has a confident musicality—he spent yesterday mixing this drink as a special at Backbar; Gertsen is brisk and businesslike. After 10 minutes of rattling exercise, the fizzes decant.

Lebedevitch pours small glasses for the judges, but fixes a full-sized portion for the sake of presentation. She uses Bombay Sapphire gin, which has a clean nip that doesn't detract from the dessert aromas of cream and orange flower. The sweetness is balanced with lime, and the texture is evenly frothy, like a latte that never devolves into a slurp of warm milk. She scores on flavor and accuracy, racking up 113/120 points. "If you don't drink that, I will," she says, pointing to the presentation glass. And she does.

Although Treadway favors Old Tom Gin, Red Lantern doesn't stock it, so he opts for cucumbery Hendrick's ("It's supposed to be a brunch drink"). A heavier hand with the soda water makes it subtly fizzier than Lebedevitch's, earning full marks from one of the judges on accuracy. He wins his tier by a nose with 115.

By this time, some of the judges are taking deeper tastes. A few glasses hold nothing but ice streaked with Ramos residue. On to Richard, who immediately confesses, "I didn't know the recipe, so Josh helped me out." Instead of a neat twist of orange zest, her garnishes are droopy, and the texture is more granular than frothy. She bows out with 78 points. Gertsen, on the other hand, scores big on flavor and presentation. His orange twists might have been crafted by Flemish jewelers. Like Treadway, he earns full marks from one judge and wins his tier with 122.

Drunken Aside #2:
Using a ball and stick molecular model, the sort that organic chemistry students cobble together out of plastic and foam, alcohol has a carbon body, an oxygen head, and limbs of protruding hydrogen. It looks kind of like a doggy. Even on a molecular level, then, alcohol is approachable. Companionable. A good partner for curling up on the sofa with a bag of corn chips.

Of course, it has a tendency to bite.

ROUND THREE

"So the two guys in bartender vests made it to the finals," laughs Lebedevitch. Our finalists do, glaringly, look the part of serious mixologists—men who can comfortably discuss Pisang Ambon without giggling. Their final test is to concoct, in 15 minutes, a cocktail that embodies the character of The Improper Bostonian. An Improper-tini, if you will. This, naturally, raises a lot of ontological questions: Who are we? What's the distillate of our soul? And is it garnished with a cocktail onion?

Gertsen's answer takes "improper" to mean "inverted." "I thought of Julia Child, and how she liked reverse martinis," he explains. The result is a dark amber mix of two parts vermouth to one of Bombay Sapphire gin, leavened with orange curacao and Angostura bitters. Instead of Child's preferred dry vermouth, he uses sweet Martini & Rossi. "People like sweet things, but not a lot of them admit it." The taste is complex yet restrained, a piano sonata to a true martini's symphonic torrent. He scores 98/120, with highest marks on flavor.

Treadway displays a flashier vision with his "East Meets West," a drink that suggests The Improper is worldly, a little spicy and terrifically overpriced. "If you ordered this in a bar, it'd cost $25," he admits, abashed. "But I wanted to use Japanese whiskey, and the only one I could find here was Yamazaki 18-year-old." It's a frothy combination of Don Julio Añejo tequila, Domaine de Canton ginger liqueur, Yamazaki whiskey, lemon juice and three judicious drops of Sriracha. The first taste is crisp citrus, gaining teeth from the ginger. Then you feel the liquors' brawn before the whisper of an afterburn. The disparate layers are idiosyncratic, but, against logic, they mesh—a case of the parts adding up to a weirdly satisfying whole.

As the judges deliberate, Richard slips behind the bar and starts pouring shots for herself and the other "losers." The East Meets West earns 99 points from the judges, with top scores on creativity, trumping Gertsen's inverse martini by the tiniest possible margin. I announce that Sam Treadway is the winner of the Great Improper Bartending Competition, and the bartenders throw themselves, surprisingly lustily, into a spate of group hugs.

Drunken Aside #3:
In James Jones' From Here to Eternity, there's a passage describing the exertion it takes to drink seriously: "It required concentration, and study, and energy, and will power, and a great deal of thought; to really be a successful drunkard. Anybody could be a half-assed drunkard."

Jones implies a parallel between drinking and boxing, and he's right. Contrary to the tutting wisdom, drinking isn't for the weak. The bodily attrition, the unseen scars, the will it takes to remain standing for one more round. And if, out of perversity or doggedness or addiction to the ordeal, you choose to endure, it's only temporary. There is, in the end, a solitary, inevitable outcome to the fight. You will lose. Mortality will have its due.

But that's true even if you never climb inside the ring.

Tallying each tier's scores, the Hall of Famers earned 690 points to the Rising Stars' 683, proving that experience yields a slim edge. As the bartenders stow away their jiggers, Brother Cleve tips his hat and hurries to catch a bus. The Red Lantern crew gathers the half-drained glasses. Herb bunches are whisked back to the kitchen, rum bottles slip into their cardboard case. We amble, blinking, back into the day, where the spring sun emblazons the streets with those clear, sharp colors that come from an afternoon spent in the shade of a cocktail bar.

We've got to do this again next year. ×××

THE RISE OF LOCAL CRAFT DISTILLERIES

Not long ago,

no one would've used the word "craft" to describe something as standardized as liquor. In the postwar years, industrial booze producers like Bacardi, Seagram's and Smirnoff dictated how rum, whiskey, gin and vodka were supposed to taste and, thanks to the likes of August Busch and Adolph Coors, the same thing was true of beer. It was the beer drinkers who revolted first. "Handcrafted" became a buzzword while microbreweries sprouted like mold spores in a half-full bottle of Miller left on a window ledge. Cocktail connoisseurs have been late adapters, but "craft spirits," locally produced by small-batch distillers, are increasingly popular, largely due to loosened federal laws allowing outside investment in new liquor producers. Berkshire Mountain Distillers in western Massachusetts and the Triple Eight Distillery on Nantucket are two local success stories. More recently, at least four new distilleries have opened in and around Boston.

Privateer Rum

IPSWICH

As the old rhyme goes:

So this is dear old Boston,
The home of the bean and the cod,
Where Lowells speak only to Cabots,
And Cabots speak only to God.

While many Boston Brahmin families have quietly rested on their laurels for generations, the Cabots have never ceased being useful. For instance, the carbon black in everything from your car tires to the ink in your printer may well be produced by the Cabot Corporation. From this industrious background comes Andrew Cabot, the founder of Privateer Rum on Cape Ann.

The name Privateer is a nod to an 18th-century ancestor, another Andrew Cabot, who—in addition to owning 25 ships that were legally sanctioned to attack foreign vessels during wartime—was a rum distiller. His present-day namesake, who worked in the tech industry and education, was doing some genealogical research on his colonial ancestor when he unearthed a 1777 advertisement for a rum distillery pirate Cabot tried to sell in Beverly. Considering this, the present-day Cabot saw an opportunity. In a market saturated by booze that tastes like cloves and caramel or coconut suntan lotion, he recognized a niche for a more refined spirit, the very antithesis of Captain Morgan.

"I wanted to create something you'd enjoy sipping on the rocks, the way you do whiskey, or some of the better rums you find in the Caribbean," he says. "In the 1980s, you saw vodka explode in popularity. In the '90s, it was bourbon, and the 2000s, gin and tequila. We felt there was headroom in the rum category. Not that our goal is to produce huge quantities. Just a very high-quality rum."

SHIPPING UP TO IPSWICH
PRIVATEER NELSE CLARK AND ANDREW DISTILLER JEFF MURPHY

PRIVATEER'S
TASTING AREA

His partner and childhood friend, Nelse Clark, a former restaurant and bar owner, adds, "When we started, a bartender friend of mine said that in 25 years, he's never had a request for a white rum straight."

They set out to change that. Together with a team of comrades, Cabot and Clark created the Privateer distillery in an industrial park in Ipswich. While the real estate might not be as picturesque as the waterfront operation his ancestor co-owned, it's large enough to contain their raw ingredients (cane juice, molasses and brown sugar), their equipment (a fermentor, still, attenuation tank, oak casks for aging, etc.), a small reference library about distilling and Revolutionary privateering, and, of course, a bar. The distillery is decked with nautical touches, including working cannon portholes and artifacts that have been salvaged from the sea.

All distilleries have essentially the same equipment, and the process is basic chemistry: the raw ingredient is blended with yeast in a mash tank, transferred to a fermentation tank where the yeast eats up the sugars until the mixture is between 8 and 9 percent alcohol, and then run through a giant Willy Wonka–looking copper machine called a still. An elaborate evaporator, the still brings the alcohol content up to the desired percentage (which is dictated by law for different types of liquor). That's pretty much how you make booze.

It's the still where skill comes into play. The secret lies in a process known as "cutting," in which the rum maker removes the "head" and "tail"—i.e. the unwanted (and even toxic) stuff from the beginning and end of the process—and leave the "heart"—the liquid gold that's then aged in oak barrels to become the finished product. This is the essence of the distiller's art, and through trial and error, the Privateer crew have created a spirit with a flavor profile unlike most other rums: clean, complex and anything but sweet.

As the 18th-century Andrew Cabot might've said, "Yo, ho, ho." We'll have a bottle of that.

Turkey Shore Distillers IPSWICH

Across town, in a similar industrial park and working in a comparable setup, childhood friends and Ipswich natives Mat Perry and Evan Parker run Old Ipswich Rum. Like Cabot, Perry was a teacher (high school history). While on a sabbatical five years ago, he took an interest in the local food scene in Hanover, N.H. Realizing that the same enthusiasm could apply to spirits, Perry decided to concoct one.

So he pitched the idea to Parker, a former clam farmer and one of the Ipswich area's first aquaculturists. Their excitement grew when they learned that from 1770 to 1836 a distillery operated on the street where they grew up, Turkey Shore Road. The barrels of molasses were shipped up the Ipswich River, and, it turned out, unloaded on a wharf that had been located right in Perry's backyard. The idea seemed destined.

"Our ethos is to try and recreate an old New England rum," Perry says.

To educate themselves, they did coursework in Chicago at the Siebel Institute (the Harvard of brewing) and took a course from a rum maker in Denver.

"We read books, watched videos on YouTube and experimented in a two-and-a-half gallon stove-top still. We made a lot of crap." Eventually, they hit on the two products they now sell: Old Ipswich White Cap and Tavern Style. The former has a more neutral flavor, while the latter is similar to the finer light brown rums from the islands, like Anguilla's Pyrat or Jamaica's Appleton Estate. This month, the American Distilling Institute named it the best micro-distilled rum in the country, while White Cap won bronze in the clear category.

Their two-story operation is decorated with touches such as rusty farm implements, an anchor, and an old Johnson outboard motor, and their fermentation tanks are named after the different distillers—"John Heard," "G.W. Heard"—who made rum in their hometown. Ingenious details like a custom-made carbon filtration system (essentially a giant jerry-rigged Brita filter) and fish-tank heaters as fermentation-tank warmers give the place an endearingly mom-and-pop feel.

But the rum speaks for itself and the distillers' passion for creating something aficionados will enjoy. Upstairs, in their tiny office/tasting room, Perry offers a sip of a "seasonal" rum—a market they're beginning to explore. Named after the infamous greenhead that's the bane of beachgoers in Cape Ann, it's infused with lemongrass, green tea and mint.

Undoubtedly, it's the first greenhead we've ever welcomed.

Bully Boy Distillers BOSTON

BULLY FOR THEM
DAVE AND WILL WILLIS AT WORK

Founded by brothers Dave and Will Willis, Bully Boy Distillers was inspired by Charlescote Farm, their family's fourth-generation working farm in Sherborn. There, during Prohibition, the Willis' grandfather amassed a trove of locally made bottles, storing it in a fieldstone vault in the farmhouse basement, which friends and family used as a speakeasy. It was crude, homemade booze, with names like "Medford Rum" and "Cow Whiskey," which might've been unpalatable but certainly had character.

Will (formerly a global real estate financier) and Dave (a lawyer) traded the rat race to help run the farm and honor their family's legacy by creating more polished versions of the spirits they'd seen stashed in the basement. Working on the edge of Roxbury and the South End, they now make two whiskeys (a white and a wheat), two rums (a dark and a light) and a vodka. The distillery takes its moniker from a workhorse their great-grandfather named in honor of his Harvard roommate, who had a habit of using the word "bully" as an expression for something great. The roommate's name was Teddy Roosevelt.

With the loud sounds of a car repair shop coming from across the street, the Willis brothers make their booze in a space that looks like a cross between a garage and a laboratory. Besides the labels on the bottles, the few dashes of color come from an old Dukes of Hazzard trash can and vintage magazine ads for long-forgotten liquor brands.

"This is a backlash against the 60-odd years of large conglomerates dominating the market," says Will. "We'll make in a year what Maker's Mark does in a day. The yield is really small, maybe 1 gallon every 17 minutes, but none of the big houses produce an un-aged whiskey, which we do."

The brothers are largely self-taught from a decade of distilling at home, and their jump into the commercial market was dictated by their enjoyment of the process, along with the rising tide of cocktail culture.

"Boston's a drinking town," Dave points out. "We were shocked no one was doing this already."

Like other distillers, the Willis brothers love experimenting with their product in traditional ways, like altering the amount of char on the oak barrels in which it's aged. They also enlisted local cocktail guru Noon Inthasuwam to create a series of infusions with Asian flair; the first, a blend of white whiskey, apple, ginger root, honey and cider vinegar, debuted in February. Free from the chemical flavors that characterize so many major brands, their ideas are taste tested at the bar set up right inside the front door.

Their white whiskey earned a 95 out of 100 and their vodka a 92 out of 100 from the Beverage Testing Institute, an independent rating service that considers a 94 extremely high and highly unusual. Not bad for a pair of farm boys who could've climbed the corporate ladder and, instead, decided to make themselves, and incidentally us, happy.

Ryan & Wood
GLOUCESTER

Also a family operation, Ryan & Wood is located in somewhat fancier digs—an office park. There's even a tasting room/gift shop with T-shirts, caps and tiki glasses for sale, in addition to the liquor they produce: Knockabout gin, Beauport vodka and Folly Cove rum. The fact that they're set up for visitors is part of the business model developed by Bob Ryan and his nephew, Dave Wood.

"We wanted it to be something that attracted agri-tourism, so that all the people who come here to whale watch or sightsee would come visit, and we wanted to show the people who've made a living off the sea for 400 years that there are other options."

Like a lot of second- and third-generation Gloucester natives, Ryan had worked as a "fish cutter," aka seafood processor, and watched the industry shrink and the town's once-thriving waterfront wither. He went into banking, but he wanted to bring manufacturing to Gloucester, so he started the distillery with his nephew, a lawyer. His wife, son and assorted other relatives are also full-time employees.

In 2006, he received permit number 73 from the federal government (he estimates there are now more than 400). Back then, as far as he knew, his family had no connection to the liquor business, but it was the approval process for the license that taught him otherwise. The feds take careful consideration before granting permission to make liquor to anyone who has a family member within two generations with a criminal record. They questioned Ryan about this, and he was stumped. Then one of his cousins sheepishly explained that his grandfather, who had earned a nickel a day as a Gloucester constable during Prohibition, earned a dollar a night doing security for rumrunners, and he'd been arrested for it.

KERNEL OF AN IDEA
TEN FLAVORS GO INTO KNOCKABOUT GIN.

"It almost shut the whole thing down," Ryan laughs.

In choosing which spirits to make, they wanted to appeal to the broadest possible audience. Rum was a no-brainer, because of its deep New England roots and because a lot of people who drink it are the boating types who visit Cape Ann during the summer. The same goes for gin. As for vodka, it's simply the best-selling spirit. The name Knockabout comes from the fishing schooners built at the turn of the last century, while "beau port" is how the 17th-century explorer Samuel de Champlain described Gloucester Harbor. Folly Cove, just to the north, is famous for its many shipwrecks and as a place where smugglers throughout the centuries sought safety (or mistook it for Gloucester), only to founder on the rocks.

Ryan is a wealth of lore, like the fact that before the Civil War the town of Medford alone had 63 rum distilleries. He's also shrewd in his packaging decisions, realizing that wax-sealed tops aren't friendly to the service industry, or the storage specs on most visiting pleasure boats. Most of all, though, he and his family are justifiably proud of their spirits, most recently adding whiskey to their portfolio.

"Rye is the tipping point in distilling," he says, "and that's where we stack up."

Apparently, connoisseurs agree. A businessman drove all the way from Washington, D.C. to pick up a case of Ryan & Wood straight rye to bring home. That was an even bigger compliment than the father who brought his kid on a distillery tour and said, "Earning his chemistry badge for Boy Scouts was a lot less painful than I thought it was going to be." ×××

Pigment of the Imagination

WALL TOGETHER

SPRING IS ALL ABOUT renewal, an idea taken to heart by Artists for Humanity. A group of teen volunteers recently joined artist Lynette Shaw to beautify a damaged wall at 101 Hampden St. in Roxbury—it had formerly sported graffiti reading "Losers." Using this canvas, they created a vibrant, abstract mural and unveiled the results this month. On April 28, you can help AFH celebrate the positive nexus of art and community at its seventh annual Greatest Party on Earth, which this year takes its theme from the environmental documentary Vanishing of the Bees. See the EpiCenter transformed into a hive of entertainment with Brazilian drummers and dancers as well as a disco and funk band and trapeze artists.

ARIEL SPIERER

The Greatest Party on Earth happens on April 28 at 9 pm, $125–$250, at the Artists for Humanity EpiCenter, 100 West 2nd St., Boston (617-268-7620) afhboston.org

Movies Edited by Kyle Wright

Reviews by Sean Burns

American Reunion ★★ Presupposing a level of affection for these characters I suspect is shared by very few, this belated fourth installment (not counting the direct-to-video spinoffs) finds Jason Biggs and Co. settling uncomfortably into their 30s. The entire original cast returns to Michigan for a curiously timed 13th high school reunion, presumably comparing notes on how that whole movie stardom thing never quite worked out. Biggs' Jim complains that parenthood has put a stake through evenings with his formerly horny wife (Alyson Hannigan) while the old gang mopes around making references to earlier films. The lone source of amusement is Seann William Scott's Stifler, still sputtering obscenities, partying hard and wondering aloud how he got stuck with this bunch of prematurely old farts. On the bright side, if this makes enough money, maybe Tom Hanks will finally consider my pitch for a Bachelor Party sequel, which will catch up with all those characters now that they've joined AARP. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Cabin in the Woods ★★★ We've all seen this flick before, where a few teens shack up in a cottage for a booze- and hormone-fueled weekend that turns predictably horrific. But what you haven't seen is a nutzoid explanation for where these kinds of pictures come from, and Buffy the Vampire Slayer brain-trust Joss Whedon and Drew Goddard have concocted a snarky deconstruction involving angry gods and a couple of stiffs going through the motions in a high-tech scare factory. Character actors Richard Jenkins and Bradley Whitford spin gold out of Whedon's quips, engineering slasher-film tropes during just another day at the office. Younger members of the cast give game and, at times, quite purposefully awful performances, with Thor's Chris Hemsworth the standout for deliberate inelegance. The joke within a joke eventually escalates to giddy levels of carnage and insanity, yet you find yourself suffering from a weirdly hollow feeling when all is said and done. Clever only gets you so far. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Damsels in Distress ★★★ ½ Writer/director Whit Stillman, sadly MIA since 1998's The Last Days of Disco, returns with his brand of uppity, articulate characters and their lack of self-awareness. Indie it-girl Greta Gerwig stars as Violet, the leader of the in-crowd at the fictional Seven Oaks College who's tirelessly devoted to improving the lives of her fellow students, whether or not they need her assistance. Running a suicide prevention center (the "prevention" part of the sign keeps amusingly falling off), Violet believes there's no psychological problem that can't be cured by free donuts, scented soaps and a vigorous regimen of tap dancing. Loopier and more cartoonish than Stillman's previous pictures, Damsels doesn't progress from scene to scene so much as it lurches through the school year, but the ramshackle effect is curiously enchanting. Stillman eyes even the dimmest of these kids with tremendous affection, until Violet's lifelong ambition to "start an international dance craze" becomes weirdly wistful and almost noble. A fine mess. (At Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

The Deep Blue Sea ★★★★ Lush and altogether devastating, director Terence Davies applies his lyrical post-WWII remembrances to Terence Rattigan's play about the inequities of desire. At first it seems an odd fit, with Davies' pregnant pauses colliding against Rattigan's astringent dialogue, but together they build a cumulative impact that just about flattened me. Rachel Weisz delivers a hypnotic performance as a bored housewife who finds herself enthralled by Tom Hiddleston's ill-tempered RAF pilot. Positioning a forgotten birthday as a fulcrum from which the movie drifts back and forth in time, The Deep Blue Sea burrows into the inconvenient truth that sometimes you just love someone more than that person is capable of loving you. Weisz doesn't get all actressy and shrill about it. Indeed, what makes the movie stick in your gut is her resignation from the beginning of this ill-fated affair—the look in her eyes suggesting she already knows exactly how this is all going to end. (At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

The Hunger Games ★½ Seabiscuit director Gary Ross' careless version of Suzanne Collins' popular best-seller is my least favorite kind of adaptation—a timid affair so preoccupied with checking off plot points to please the established fanbase that it can't be bothered to engage the uninitiated. Jennifer Lawrence stars as a quick-witted teenage archer tossed into a horrific annual reality-TV tournament, during which poor children are forced to fight to the death for the amusement of the one percent. There's a nasty satirical point being made here, but I'll be damned if Ross knows what it is. Lacking the budget or scope for what's being attempted, this future dystopia is a lot of chintzy costumes, bad wigs and hambone character actors. Presumably attempting to obscure the limited production design and keep the violence to a PG-13 rating, Ross shoots The Hunger Games in jerky ellipses submerged in murky cinematography. Most of the time it's downright impossible to follow what's happening on-screen. I know you loved the book, but this is terrible filmmaking. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Jeff, Who Lives at Home ★ ½ The DIY pleasantness of directors Jay and Mark Duplass plays just fine on the indie -festival circuit, where slight narratives and a lack of ambition can coast on microbudgeted charm. But in a multiplex production with a cast stocked with stars, the brothers' slacker ethos just translates as lazy. Jason Segel stars as the titular 30-year-old stoner pondering questions of the universe in his mother's basement, while Ed Helms grates as his tacky brother who's worried that his wife (Judy Greer) might be cheating. In a completely disconnected thread, Susan Sarandon turns up as their cubicle-drone mother who's intrigued by the attentions of a secret admirer at the office. Not much at all happens in this picture, which subsists for 90 minutes on improvisation and some shoddy camerawork. The Duplass trademark is to constantly flick the zoom lens for no discernible reason, as if frantically signaling that they're not ready for prime time. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Jiro Dreams of Sushi ★★★ Jiro's sushi restaurant has only 10 seats. If you can get reservations, which book a month in advance, expect to pay upward of $300 a meal for a dining experience that sometimes lasts a mere 15 minutes, while the pro-

Dustin Time

Hot to Trot

In 1967, The Graduate enticed America with stockings, swimming pools and secret sex. Starring a doe-eyed Dustin Hoffman and a bawdy Anne Bancroft as the sex-hungry Mrs. Robinson, their relationship is like a handcuff-free precursor for the Fifty Shades of Grey set. Sneak out for your own rendezvous with this iconic film at the Coolidge Corner Theatre on April 30. Virginia Billy Barry prietor gazes impatiently at you as he hands out slices of raw fish. And yet, Sukiyabashi Jiro has received three stars from the Michelin guide, and food critics such as Tokyo's Mashuhrio Yamamoto wax rhapsodic about Jiro Ono's sushi as if it were the second coming. David Gelb's strangely engrossing documentary is foodie-ism at its most monastic. Profiling prickly 85-year-old master chef Jiro Ono, it's mainly a film about the pursuit of perfection. The humorless and disciplined Ono keeps a samurai warrior's code in the kitchen, and it's fascinating to watch the precision of a master at work. Yet the movie flirts with sadness in the margins. As much as we admire the subject's skill and commitment to professionalism, is this really all there is to life? (At Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and West Newton Cinema.)

Lockout ★★ ½ The credit "based on an original idea by Luc Besson" must be a joke, as this B-picture is a shameless rip-off of John Carpenter's Escape From New York, with the jail located in outer space instead of Manhattan. When the president's daughter (Maggie Grace) is held hostage by rioting inmates, it's up to Guy Pearce's badass to rescue her, even if he doesn't exactly want the job. There's also much ado about a stolen briefcase containing some sort of secret, but the story line gets fumbled around in this movie featuring two hours of plot stuffed into 95 minutes. Directors James Mather and Stephen St. Leger must have saved time by scrapping the establishing shots and scene transitions, as Lockout moves in such a hurry it's almost a blur. But Pearce is splendid, letting loose his inner Kurt Russell and responding to every situation with an inexhaustible supply of sarcasm. Fun junk, the movie is so silly that people can parachute to Earth from spaceships. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Three Stooges ★ An act of artistic necrophilia on par with Gus Van Sant's Psycho remake, brothers Peter and Bobby Farrelly's years-in-development "tribute" casts Sean Hayes, Chris Diamantopoulos and Will Sasso as passable imitations of Moe, Larry and Curly. Transplanted to modern times for no discernible reason, the lazy story line finds the stooges searching for $830,000 to save their endangered orphanage, allowing the Farrellys to ramp up the treacle while eliciting a rare, unfunny turn from Larry David as a nun named Sister Mary Mengele. Somewhere in the mix is Sofia Vergara as an adulterous wife plotting to have her husband whacked, with our trio of geniuses inadvertently confounding her plans at every turn. All the nyuk-nyuk's, eye-pokes and bonks on the head are faithfully rendered, albeit staged by the Farrellys with complete indifference to anything resembling comic timing or slapstick precision. Stick with the elegant idiocy of the original stooges, who never would've stooped to jokes about the Kardashians and Jersey Shore. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

21 Jump Street ★★★ ½ It won't win any awards, but 21 Jump Street is terrific where you least expect it. Fast, funny and smarter than its demeanor initially lets on, the film stars Channing Tatum and Jonah Hill as an inspired pairing of mismatched dummy cops. The absurdly handsome Tatum has the soul of a clown, and Hill remains a doughy ball of need. What's most enjoyable about the duo's unexpected chemistry is that they seem to genuinely like each other, and often shout it from the rooftops. Theirs is the most effusive bromance we've seen in this unfortunately named genre. Our heroes are tasked with infiltrating a designer drug ring that operates out of a wealthy, suburban high school, and when it gets really interesting, 21 Jump Street becomes more like a dude-comedy remake of Francis Ford Coppola's Peggy Sue Got Married, wondering what you'd do differently, if given a second crack at your teenage years. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

In Living Color

The Bright Side

Layered, vibrant and cheerful, songs from Brooklyn-based band Rubblebucket is the musical equivalent of a gobstopper. The playfully complex eight-person group boasts brass, strings, an organ and hyper-kinetics, with vocals from lead singer Kalmia Traver rounding out the kaleidoscopic repertoire. It's indie dance-pop at its most addictive. Hear their offbeat, sweet sounds on May 4 at Paradise Rock Club. Kiley Jacques

Glass Act To get a fresh perspective on an ordinary object you need to view it in a different light. Michael Zigmond plays with light and shadow to transform simple surroundings into pensive portraits. Using oil on various surfaces, Zigmond paints everyday items to appear tangible, timeless and three-dimensional. See his works May 2–27 at the Chase Young Gallery.

Star Writer

An Open Case

Robert B. Parker penned more than 70 novels in his career, and the popular Spenser series was the jewel in his literary crown. Although the Cambridge resident passed away in 2010, fellow crime writer Ace Atkins continues the story. In Robert B. Parker's Lullaby, Spenser helps a teen solve her mother's murder. Atkins and Joan Parker, widow of the late author, celebrate the novel and Parker's legacy on May 4 at Porter Square Books.

Roasted Monkfish with Grilled & Roasted Eggplant, Tomato, Capers and Olive Oil at Bistro du Midi

ABE & LOUIE'S [793 Boylston Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-536-6300, abeandlouies.com] Abe & Louie's is the quintessential American steakhouse, serving prime cuts of corn fed, Midwestern beef, fresh seafood and garden produce. Steaks are aged on the bone for six weeks to ensure maximum flavor. Signature dishes include the bone-in filet mignon, NY sirloin and swordfish chop. With its high quality food, outstanding service and classic interiors, this award-winning restaurant has consistently remained a Boston favorite since its debut in 1998.

BISTRO DU MIDI [272 Boylston Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-426-7878, bistrodumidi.com] Bistro du Midi showcases authentic Provencal cuisine in a warm, welcoming, and beautiful setting. Inspired by the ingredients and culinary techniques of the Midi region in France, Executive Chef, Robert Sisca presents modern, ingredient-driven creations that are at once refined and approachable. From a carefully conceived charcuterie selection to the freshest seafood, meats and vegetables, Bistro du Midi brings the simple, clean and bold flavors of Provence to Boston.

JOE'S AMERICAN BAR & GRILL [9 locations in the Boston greater area, visit joesamerican.com] Joe's serves classic American comfort food in a comfortable setting, making it a local favorite for lunch, dinner, weekend brunch or take-out. Everything is made in-house, from the famous clam chowder to their juicy burgers or fall-off-the bone ribs. With carved wood, stained glass and vintage lighting, Joe's is reminiscent of your favorite New England watering hole. Try the bloody mary or one of their local beers on tap.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

THE PURPLE SHAMROCK [1 Union Street, Boston, 617-227-2060, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the freedom trail across from Boston City Hall on Union Street. The Purple Shamrock is the perfect place to stop by and have a bite to eat. The fare is composed of New England specialties with burgers, sandwiches, hearty pastas, fresh seafood, tender steaks and other great favorites. Let's not forget their infamous Shamrock Brunch served every Saturday and Sunday that is often paired with live music. After dark, The Purple Shamrock has nightly entertainment with a mix of live music, karaoke and DJ's. At The Purple Shamrock there is something for everyone.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post- game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

On the Town!

Boston's finest restaurants and clubs

JOSE MCINTYRE'S [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Jose McIntyre's is located across from the Aquarium on Milk Street. This is Boston's only Mexican-Irish restaurant and bar. For close to two decades Jose's has been an institution with the after work and late night party crowds. If the Dos Equis man is the world's most interesting man, Jose McIntyre is the world's most entertaining. Come experience the most unique venue in Boston. With 5 rooms, 3 bars, 2 floors and a game room; José is the perfect place to unwind with co-workers or host a celebration.

BARS & CLUBS

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 Dartmouth Street, Boston, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Something's always brewing at Best of Boston's award winning beer bar. BRUNCH

THE BILTMORE BAR & GRILL [1205 Chestnut Street, Newton, 617-527-2550, thebiltmoregrill.com] Opened at the start of Prohibition, the Biltmore started out as a speakeasy and has been a neighborhood favorite in Newton's historic Upper Falls ever since. Brunch is served Saturday, Sunday and Monday holidays featuring creative menu items such as Huevos Tacos, Sausage Fritter Sandwich and Biltmore's famous Chicken & Waffles. Brunch libations such as the Danish Bloody Mary and Red Beer (The Cure!) help ease your way into the day.

LOCAL 149 [149 P Street, South Boston, 617-269-0900, local149.com] A neighborhood joint in South Boston's Citypoint, Local 149 offers historic roots and lots of heart & soul. Brunch is served Saturdays and Sundays featuring new classics from Chef Leah DuBois such as "Toast To Life and Bacon" and the "Lobster MacMuffin". 'Spicy Pimento Cheese Fries' and 'Dixie Chicken" start the day right washed down with a Bucket of High Life ponies or the $5 Milkshake.

MOOO.... [15 Beacon Street, Boston, 617-670-2515, mooorestaurant.com] In the shadow of Beacon Hill's lofty State House and within the grandeur of the XV Beacon Hotel is MOOO...., a steakhouse extraordin-aire. Chef David Hutton offers a modern approach of fine selected meat and seafood dishes. Breakfast and lunch weekdays, dinner daily, Sunday brunch, bar and lounge. An impressive Wine Cellar and discreet Parlor Suites are the solution to successful business entertaining and private dining. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] "Beer's not just for breakfast anymore." GRACE NOTES

Hanky Panky

For the oldest continually performing arts organization in America, the Handel and Haydn Society certainly knows how to keep things fresh.

The Society Ball (proudly sponsored by The Improper Bostonian) marked H&H's 197th season with a black-tie gala of unparalleled elegance in the ballroom of the Mandarin Oriental.

Much of the credit goes to the evening's honoree, the marvelous Mary Nada, accompanied by her dashing other half, Sherif, and guests like cochair and Akris addict Debbie First with the ever-affable Bob, Real Housewife of Cambridge Jan Saragoni, face of WGBH-TV Channel 2 Jared Bowen, über-philanthropists Steve and Jane Akin, the Beacon Hill yoga babes, Aida, Siga and Vyda Bielkus, design avatar Peter Grglik and his absurdly talented other half, Michael Tilley, and others too sparkly to mention.

The musical performances were, needless to say, superb, dinner was delicious, and dessert, for at least one guest, was accompanied by a game of footsie under the table.

But a journalist never reveals his sources, and a gentleman doesn't kiss and tell.

Ceci N'est Pas un Partie

Diamonds are forever, and it would've been fun (although a little exhausting) if Le Bal Du Diamant, was, too.

The black-tie fund-raiser for Boston Ballet, held at the Park Plaza Castle, had a French surrealist theme, and it felt like walking onto the set of a Buñuel film, with images of box hedges projected on the walls and a topiary maze around long banks of tables set for 20.

Among those on hand to be blown away: the evening's honorees, Lisa and Tom Blumenthal, artistic director Mikko Nissenen (celebrating his 10th year with the company), raven-haired beauty Pam Lazares and her handsome husband, Nick, the ridiculously sexy Nina and David Fialkow, super-balletomanes Ruth and John Littlechild, retired captain of biotech Henri Termeer and the lovely Belinda, the entire Humphrey clan, investor extraordinaire Seth Klarman, plenty of women who had taken the invitation at its word and hauled out the diamonds, and lots of dancers who looked as good in formalwear as they do in leotards.

Dinner was accompanied by a blistering performance and the dance floor remained crowded until well after my dogs were barking. Meanwhile, the evening's funniest exchange took place at the bar:

"This room reminds me of a painting by Magritte."

"What?"

"You know Magritte?"

"Ma Gritte? Why, no. But Pa Gritte and I went to school together."

Subtlety Be Damned

Among the things this city can be thankful for: The Theater Offensive never fails to live up to its name, especially with its annual Climacts! fund-raiser.

This year, it was held at the subterranean Theater District den of iniquity, Guilt, and as always, the auction items included a "Fluffer Package." (If you have to ask, you have no future in the porn industry).

The convivial crowd, primarily prominent members of the LGBT community, included "Gaysian" stand-up Alec Mapa, the superhero-handsome Dean Hara, aristocratic literary agent Esmond Harmsworth, aristocratic Venezuelan Raphael James-Branger, the empress of Ash Street, Joan Parker, dashing tie designer Tony Corey, babe-a-licious blonde auctioneer Kathy Kingston, and crisp British hottie Christopher Hird, to name a mere handful.

Among the evening's entertainment: JbDubs performing his viral video hit "I Hate My Job" (alongside the luscious Bradley Ryan and Lawrence Rines), a Marlene Dietrich–like set from what was undoubtedly a real woman, a trio of gropeable Brazilian go-go boys and free-flowing drinks from the likes of delectable bartender Michael LaPeruta.

Among the evening's most unfortunate remarks, "Are you inching in?" "If it hurts, it's working!" and "Really? Double-fisting?!"

Among the evening's more amusing remarks: "He kissed me, and I wanted a Hazmat suit," and "My midlife crisis started when I went into Dolce & Gabbana in Milan and they said, 'Nothing is your size.'" ✖✖✖

the IMPROPER

Revisionist Fictions

Were Melville to visit the islands today, Moby-Dick might've been a very different book. Instead of whales, the crew of the Pequod would be hunting vacation properties with quality bathroom finishes. We'd meet Queequeg reciting the roast halibut special at a modern bistro known for its craft cocktails and emphasis on local, seasonal ingredients. Ahab, of course, would be a young woman exploring her sexuality in exciting (and dare I suggest transgressive?) ways. Possibly with vampires. And so, turning in the widening gyre, we slouch toward the future.

Adam DeTour

Still, today's Martha's Vineyard and Nantucket have plenty to inspire a Great American Novelist. Moby-Dick is, at root, a story about the folly of man, and an evening at Nantucket's Chicken Box is a tutorial in it. There's something more Milton than Melville, though, about a place where preppies grind to over-amped cover bands while sweating a day's worth of gin into each other's pelvises, and where, if you stand still for five minutes, you might contract gonorrhea. So, too, the old salts on the harbor are ready-baked fictional characters. And by old, I mean attractive young couples. By salts, I mean with trust funds.

Not to say that times don't change for the better. Very few Nantucketers nowadays die in flensing accidents, and instead of consumption you get yoga retreats. The storefronts smell like white sage and muffins instead of rendered blubber. And, on blue summer mornings, you can still find metaphysical truths in watching the long horizon from the ferry deck.

GETTING TIPSY

AS AN INTERNATIONAL race officer, Tom Duggan is both a course designer and an official, a powerful man on the sailing scene who earlier this month kept a watchful eye on the U.S. Women's Olympic Trials. On May 26–28, he'll lord over the 41st Figawi Race Weekend, a local event more casual but no less spirited, with which Duggan has been involved since the 1980s. "I wouldn't kid you, a large part of what draws people to the island is the party," says Duggan, although he admits this year he's content to act as an also-ran. "When I was a kid, we'd hang out all night. Now I say hello to everyone and then drift back to the cottages. I can't keep up!" NICK ALTSCHILLER

TOASTS OF THE TOWN

A cleverly curated drink list and homely, antique-decked nooks won't boost a new restaurant into the rank of "hotspot," even one as welcoming as Park in Harvard Square. To win hearts and return customers, you need a killer kitchen, as evidenced by chef Mark Goldberg's dishes like the "Tasting of Toasts," a spin on canapés that errs on the refined. Cuts of crisp baguette are dressed with spicy speck, Comté cheese and a lightly fried quail's egg—a gourmand's breakfast in a bite. Next comes sweet and salty with fig preserve, Great Blue Hill cheese and balsamic, rounded out with a North Sea nibble of house-cured gravlox, dill, candied lemon and pickled shallot. Park knocks it out with three palpable hits. ANDREW RIMAS

With beach season on the horizon, that ratty canvas tote crusted with last summer's sand shouldn't see the light of the sun. Leave it at the bottom of your closet and update your arm candy with a colorful patterned beach bag from local active lifestyle brand Ame & Lulu. SUGAR ADDS SPICE

Dinner's on deck

SUGAR BAKING CO. & Restaurant is growing up. The 45-seat Roslindale destination, which opened as a breakfast and lunch spot last year, recently nabbed a beer and wine license and has hired chef Cristophe Gest to create a new dinner menu that's slated to debut in early June.

"We already have an identity and a following," says Mike Black, who refers to himself as Sugar's "operations guy." Now it's time to expand that identity with a bill of fare Black describes as "some rustic Italian, but with the freedom to use whatever's seasonal" prepared by the French-born chef, whom Black says has an affinity for Mexican-Asian fusion. Confused? He also says the menu won't be pigeonholed. Clearly.

IF YOU DON'T KNOW YOUR knockwurst from your kielbasa, you'll find the missing link at Bronwyn, Tim Wiechmann's forthcoming sausage-centric restaurant in Union Square.

Named after the T.W. Food chef's wife, the menu will draw inspiration from Germany, Austria and other central European countries, with a house-made sausage repertoire ranging from boudin blanc to cotechino. Wiechmann also promises some vegetarian dishes ("maybe an heirloom grain ragout with pumpkin") and a beverage program focusing on Hungarian and Croatian wines. Expect a fall opening.

TAKING ANOTHER SHOT AT SUCCESS, Wolfie's Kitchen and Bar in South Boston should be open again by the time you read this. New chef Kenny Jervis says the relaunch brings the restaurant "back to a neighborhood menu," without being just another Southie beer hall. His menu has been simplified and repriced, with dishes like a grilled pork porterhouse with lemon-pesto potatoes and haricots vert, and Maine shrimp with smokehouse Andouille piperade over grits, having wallet-friendly prices from $17 to $21.

IT'S A CHALICE, NOT A GLASS.

A WICKED GOOD TIME

The Revere Hotel Boston Common celebrated its grand opening on April 18 with an over-the-top fashion spectacle that involved models scaling 24 stories in Ted Baker's latest collection (accented by safety harnesses). Attendees got a peek at what $27 million in renovations will buy, but they didn't get to see Emerald, the glowing, Oz-themed lounge that's landed (via tornado?) in the spot that was once the Theatre Cafe. No detail has been overlooked in the 6,000-square-foot space, from a state-of-the-art sound system to custom stemware embedded with green gems.

Dorothy references are incorporated in a way that avoids blatant gimmicks. You won't find a yellow brick floor or munchkin-only staff, but there's a twinkling aluminum sculpture inspired by her Kansas twister and an extensive use of color-changing lights on everything from the onyx bar to the back wall (one can assume the default color is green). Modular seating can be tailored for different-sized groups, and the back room, with floor to ceiling windows, can be closed off for private parties.

Most "lounges" in Boston transition into clubs as the night progresses, but Emerald aims to cater to folks looking to linger over cocktails and share fork-free fare, like fish tacos, coconut-tempura shrimp or charcuterie. Dancing isn't obligatory. "We want people to come in at 4:30 for a drink after work, and feel comfortable enough to stay until 11," says general manager Aggelos Panagopoulos.

Bar manager Teodora Bakardzhieva is the resident good witch, mixing potions like the refreshing Boston Shandy or a blueberry-spiked vodka mojito. "A hotel has such a diverse, international clientele," she says. "We tried to build a list that embraces Boston's personality for people from all over." No doubt, locals, travelers and tin men will leave well-lubricated. KYLE WRIGHT

HOW-TO HERO

Best-selling writer Augusten Burroughs tackles life lessons in This Is How. Brookline Booksmith brings him to the Coolidge Corner Theatre on May 10.

Does the book have an overarching theme?
The past does not haunt us, we haunt the past. Being really honest with yourself is how you get through stuff. I can't tell you how many times in my own life that I've bullsted myself, thinking, I'm going to be happy now. It's like every single time I have a challenge or a crisis or something's fed up in my life, it's because there's an inaccuracy somewhere in my thinking. A lot of people don't really grasp that trauma or great loss doesn't have to make you a darker person; it can make a deeper person. There's freedom in that knowledge.

How do you balance humor with such serious subject matter?
I completely dismissed the idea of having to make something funny. There was an urgency for me to write this. I went through a growth process where writing memoirs didn't matter anymore. I wanted to be more useful. Every time something happened in my life, I had to reinvent the wheel. And you know what? Sometimes the wheel I invented was better.

How did writing this differ from writing a memoir or novel?
It was a process of subconscious and emotional triage. This isn't a book that deals with specific issues. There's no table of contents so you can look up your particular challenge. That's not the point of it. The point is, you read even the things that you think don't apply to you. Even if you're a rugged construction worker, you should read the section about being an anorexic teenage girl, because it actually does apply to you.

You'd never do another memoir?
I'd never say never, but this is the direction my career is sticking to. Right now, I don't see myself writing more memoirs. I've talked enough about everything I've survived, and now I think it's time for me to explain how. KYLE WRIGHT

Drink of the Moment

SHERRY'S JUBILEE

NAME: Elcano Collins.

PRICE: $9.

INGREDIENTS: Colosia Fino sherry, house-made rhubarb syrup, Fee Brothers Black Walnut bitters, lemon and soda water.

CREATOR: Paul Manzelli.

GARNISHED WITH A TWIST OF FATE: Manzelli stumbled upon Fee Brothers Black Walnut bitters while browsing at his neighborhood spirit shop, Ball Square Fine Wines & Liquors, just days before an earlier version of the cocktail hit the menu. Manzelli found that just a dash brought out the nutty flavors shared by the sherry and rhubarb.

TOP SPOT: The drink earned the leadoff spot on the list because it's the lightest. Sherry's low alcohol content means the cocktail is priced less than other offerings on the menu.

IN GOOD SPIRITS: Manzelli created the drink to garner interest in Fino sherry, a slower seller than the restaurant's Amontillado offering. As the cocktail menu's unexpected top seller, the strategy seems to be working.

NAME: Manufacturer J.C. Gutierrez Colosia named the sherry after Juan Sebastian Elcano, a Basque explorer who completed the globe's first circumnavigation following Magellan's death.

DEFINITION: A "Collins" describes any cocktail combining citrus, a base spirit and soda water.

HOT DATE: With lower alcohol content than other concoctions, the refreshing tipple is perfect as a pre-dinner aperitif during warmer months. Manzelli claims it's his way of saying, "Happy spring."

Beauty

No Small Feat

Consider the wise words of Mad Men's Roger Sterling: "My father was the tallest, handsomest, vainest man in New York, and he got his nails done." Even so, as I walked into Emerge Spa and Salon I felt self-conscious. Men are supposed to have thick horny nails you can use for rock climbing and lethal kickboxing. Pedicures are for girls. Aren't they?

Not if you put your feet in the hands of nail technician Eliane Lemos. She quickly got down to business, switching on my massage chair and plunging my feet into a bubbling footbath. Working with the dexterity of a Victorian seamstress, she cut, filed and buffed each nail before massaging my feet with cuticle oil, foot scrub and lotion.

Oddly, I began to feel at home. Emerge's no-frills Men's Club is all dark woods and rich leather, reminding me of my father's study. It's private and tasteful, so you never feel emasculated, despite the eucalyptus lotion on your toes. Now all you need is a stiff martini.

DEAD ON ARRIVAL

A LESSON IN TIMELINESS: I'm not sure if you understand the purpose of a deadline, but it's not only to help us get a project complete, it's to keep everybody else on schedule. Your constant neglect at finishing any task in a reasonable time frame isn't just lazy, it's rude! What the hell is wrong with you? If you're going to blow off important deadlines, at least have the know-how to avoid social media at all costs. While you're off guzzling PBR, the rest of us are trying to make a living.

Tick tock

To men everywhere:

Here's a little insight into how to treat a woman. If you go on a date, and it's a really good one (like the one I had at Brick & Mortar last week), and then you sleep together, it's usually good protocol to call within the next 72 hours, even if you don't want to go out again. It's incredibly rude to go there with someone, and then just never talk to them again. I thought we really connected when were talking about your dog and playing lacrosse. It's confusing, and that's just not how you treat someone!

I don't get it!

To all you unoriginal phonies out there:

I'm not saying that every idea I've ever had is the greatest, but seriously? You're ripping me off worse than Whole Foods. I'm a real professional, and I do it looking fab-u-lous. You're just biting. You might be able to pass off a few of my ideas as your own, but trust me: Ain't nothing better than the real thing.

Flocking south with the other seasonal migrants to Martha's Vineyard doesn't mean you should eat like a bird, especially with the Scottish Bakehouse on hand. Since 1961, this little gem has pleased health-nuts and gluttons alike, with gluten-free treats like the "melt in your mouth" brownie ($2.25) and the made-from-scratch fruit Danish ($3). Using the yields of berry patches, vegetable fields and apple trees right out back, these baked goods give fresh meaning to local produce. VIRGINIA BILLY BARRY

Chenin blanc is a white grape that throws my salivary glands into overdrive. When it's right, it's just a thrill to savor. Not too long ago, we were limited to the Loire Valley, but today there are actually more chenin vines growing on the southern tip of Africa than the rest of the world combined. In the country's cool coastal districts, like Stellenbosch, this natural wonder is crafted into a dry wine, but one that's a touch more mellow than what you'd expect from Savennières. The following three are highly recommended.

Raats "Original" Unwooded Chenin Blanc
Coasta Region, 2010 ($15, Bauer W e, Boston)
Bruwer Raats is a terroir specialist who believes the grape thrives on a combination of potassium-rich sandstone and decomposed granite soils. This blend, which includes an old vine parcel on the Raats family property, is supple and juicy, with fleshy peach fruit, a hint of fresh pear and a clean mineral finish. An engaging, easy drinking style to accent lighter fish dishes.

Ken Forrester "Reserve" Chenin Blanc
Stellenbosch, 2010 ($17, Marty's, Newton)
Restaurateur Ken Forrester produces his wine a mere four miles from the Atlantic Ocean. Quite dry, it has a classic ripe pear note, with a charming round texture and a touch of apple-like spice on the finish. Medium-bodied, with a lingering velvet impression, enjoy this chenin with more flavorful preparations enlivened with Asian seasonings.

Radford Dale "Renaissance" Chenin Blanc
Stellenbosch, 2010 ($30, Boston Wine Exchange, Boston) This major-league chenin is smoky and butterscotch-like enough to satisfy chardonnay drinkers' cravings, with rich cooked pear and honey notes, but also plenty of balancing lemony acids. It's a true lobster-and-crab wine, with layers of baking spice and earthy, stone fruit flavors.

MASTER OF WINE SANDY BLOCK IS VICE PRESIDENT OF BEVERAGE OPERATIONS FOR LEGAL SEA FOODS.

ASK THE EXPERT

WHAT SHARKS WILL WE SEE OFF THE CAPE THIS SUMMER?

Visit the Vineyard during beach season, and it's inevitable that someone mentions the biggest fish tale of all.

Lest we're consumed by fears of great whites, John W. Mandelman, Ph.D., a research scientist at the New England Aquarium, says there are about 15 species haunting local waters, including spiny and smooth dogfish, blue, thresher and the basking shark—impressive for its massive girth (not unlike a few beach-bound wayfarers). Despite its intimidating size, the last is a gentle plankton-grazer. Fact is, your Vineyard holiday is almost guaranteed to be shark-free. The last documented attack in New England was back in the '30s. Sharks have very specific diets, and human beings aren't high on the menu.

TO LOVE, HONOR AND OBEY

An intimate biography of Kennedy wives

Dan Watkins

THE WOMEN OF THE TITLE, whose gigantic marriages to three Kennedy brothers made them sisters, had very different styles. They were complementary, contentious and cozily simpatico, so their story reads almost like a novel.

Jackie, whose refinement and artistic qualities had the world bowing at her feet (perhaps a bit too reverently), is revealed to be outspoken and tough; not remotely the character with the breathy whispered voice she put on during her famous televised White House tour. Ethel comes across as brash, practical, jokey, almost down-home, a woman who burbles with children and acts surprisingly unkind to her servants. Joan, the most vulnerable sister, is also the most sympathetic, a sweet flower cruelly dismissed by Ted. Mary Jo Kopechne's drowning and Joan's distress and subsequent miscarriage came after years of Ted's flagrant infidelity while she looked sadly on. Her alcoholism seems an almost ready-made escape hatch. Jackie's best side is her support of Joan. With the Marilyn Monroe wrench thrown into their lives, Jackie and Ethel knew about pain and self-protection.

Jackie, Ethel, Joan: Women of Camelot
by J. Randy Taraborrelli

The book is full of dialogue, and world events and assassinations serve almost as a backdrop to the intimate laments and consolations these three offer each other. The book, divided by themes, is a deliciously snackable read. ✖✖✖

FROM PAGE 108: "You know, when they have nothing better to do, they run in place, or they jump all over each other like wild gorillas," Jackie once told Joan.

Whereas Jackie had wit and sarcasm, Joan was just nice. She rarely said anything unkind or critical about anyone, even in jest. "If someone opened the door for me, I would send them a thank-you note," she once recalled.

CALL TO ACK-TION

There are new openings and familiar treasures to be found on Nantucket.

DECKED OUT The White Elephant offers multiple options for lounging.

IF THE HASSLES OF TRAVEL sometimes eclipse the fun, a Nantucket getaway melds the best of all worlds. Cape Air eliminates the headache of driving to Hyannis for a ferry by offering service from Logan Airport to the island, though, flight attendants may ask about your weight in order to distribute it evenly across the pocket-sized puddle-jumpers—expediency, it turns out, trumps vanity. And while a cab drivers' union prevents hotels from running shuttles to and from the airport, taxis line up just outside to take passengers into downtown Nantucket following the 50-minute flight.

The iconic White Elephant hotel is often praised for its plush accommodations and classic clapboard-shingle exteriors. Having expanded to include the White Elephant Hotel Residences and the Inn at the White Elephant Village, the property is hard at work building a bastion of luxury in the Brant Point neighborhood. Fact is, impeccable lodging combined with proximity to downtown make it impossible to beat.

Pull up a blue deck chair on the White Elephant's green lawn to watch the boats sailing into the harbor and the parade of Lilly Pulitzer–clad travelers marching down the bleached wooden docks. Inside, cozy rooms feature electric fireplaces, one-too-many flat-screen TVs and doors that open onto outside decks. Downtown Nantucket is a short stroll from the property, and bikes (including a handsome red tandem) can be arranged through the concierge.

A harbor view is the perfect accompaniment to breakfast on the deck of the hotel's Brant Point Grill. But Nantucket has never been short on gourmet options. Up the road, American Seasons is an island mainstay, now celebrating its 25th anniversary. Overflowing flower boxes and hand-painted murals beget a cozy environment for sophisticated comfort food with comestibles culled from the area, like exceptional seared day-boat scallops with fried green tomatoes and smoky crayfish butter.

Islanders have been eager to check out the latest incarnation of Boarding House, marking its 20th year in business, but newly renovated after an unfortunate aquarium explosion at upstairs neighbor the Pearl cut last season short. Through the off-season, the staff retooled the menu with a focus on dishes like grilled Nantucket striped bass with saffron creamed corn. Mingle with the well-dressed crowd at the bar—even Bill Belichick forgoes his hoodie here. And don't miss the chance to sample the superb wine list (note that "unfinished wine may be brought home").

There are new developments on Nantucket, too. The Dreamland Theater first opened in 1911 as a spot where islanders watched silent movies and vaudeville, and remained the only on-island theater venue through 2005. Having recently completed a $30 million fund-raising effort, it reopens this spring with a 330-seat movie theater and the debut of Nantucket 24, a film shot by locals on Flip cams about a single day on the island.

Also undergoing a much-needed revamp is the waterfront eatery the Rope Walk, a harborfront joint long beloved for its ambience, if not necessarily its cuisine. It's soon to be replaced by minimalist oyster bar Cru, promising a casually elegant New England-meets-Mediterranean menu.

Before heading home, a brunch stop at cash-only diner Black Eyed Susan's (again, celebrating its 20th year) is a must. Sit at the counter for hearty fare like sourdough French toast with orange Jack Daniels butter, Portuguese scrambles and huevos rancheros. You won't regret the indulgence, even in light of weight-wary gate agents.

On an island of cobblestone, fresh seafood, sailboats and daffodils, it's tempting to linger. But with travel headaches reduced to a minimum, there's plenty of reason to return. ✖✖✖

WINNING TYPE

First Printer doesn't copy the usual comfort food menu.

15 Dunster St., Cambridge
(617-497-0900)
thefirstprinter.com

ABSOLUTELY CRABULOUS The crab cake is moist, meaty and enlivened by crunchy slaw.

THE NAME HONORS THE location, the site of the country's first printing press. On the surface, it appears the menu does, as well, reading like a reprint of the upscale-comfort-food commandments followed by a litany of new eateries. But among the hot wings and icy plates from the requisite raw bar are enough delicious quirks to stamp First Printer as separate from the rest of the stack.

First Printer's storefront space is airy and naturally lit; its brick red walls are hung with historic news clippings and wooden cases stocked with movable type. In the adjoining dining rooms there's a full bar, while roomy booths and tables provide plenty of seating.

Dinner delighted on my visits. Exploring the seafood options, we began with fried calamari ($9). Lightly breaded, their texture superb, the slices of squid took on a dose of heat from ultra-thin, deep-fried rings of jalapeño. Under the headline of "Harvard Sq. bowls," the PEI mussels ($10) combined sweet, plump mollusks with a heady broth of white wine, garlic, scallions and roasted tomatoes. The second option, labeled the "swamp bowl" ($12), made for better conversation than eating, with tough hunks of fried gator dominating the more delicate frogs' legs and crawfish. Crab cakes ($9), on the other hand, were exquisite. Each round was rich in meat and accompanied by candied Meyer lemon and a tasty, crunchy slaw of corn, beets and cabbage. Clam chowder ($5) featured lively clam flavor in a thick and creamy broth.

Of the entrees, the wild boar carbonara ($21) grabbed center stage and drew forks from all sides of our table. Velvety papardelle dressed in a luscious sauce of White Marble Farms pork belly, smoked Gouda and spring peas made for a dish at once robust and soothing. A thick New Hampshire lamb porterhouse ($21) arrived coated in a dark, unpleasant-looking gravy, but my hesitation vanished when I tasted it. The rich herb-and-garlic flavor married well with the skillfully broiled meat, braised greens and hen-of-the-woods mushroom risotto. The beer-braised pork shank ($19) could've used more time to stew (and a gravy as good as the lamb's). A "roast yard bird" ($16) copied the lamb's sides, but the austere half chicken fell to the back of the featured proteins.

NOT BOARING Wild boar carbonara wins raves.

Wander into First Printer for a weekend brunch, and you'll find some of the standouts on the truncated menu. Make sure to order a side of brisket hash ($3), one of the most delectable treats you'll encounter. For a succulent, soporific pairing, try it with "the herd" ($10)—a burger made of fresh ground buffalo cooked medium rare with grilled red onion, greens, aioli and wasabi-horseradish cheddar on focaccia. The buffalo beats out the drier beefsteak burger ($9), but both come accompanied by a sizable Caesar salad with crunchy croutons and Parmesan crisps, or mixed greens with tomatoes, cucumbers and candied walnuts.

Desserts (all $6) hit consistently high notes. The apple-pie crisp combined flaky, tender pastry with sweet-tart fruit and a scoop of vanilla ice cream, while moist, raisin-studded bread pudding came dressed with whipped cream. The chocolate strawberry shortcake crossed a brownie with shortbread for a sweet amalgam dusted with powdered sugar.

The beverage selection incorporates several draft beers, including one of my favorites, Lagunitas IPA ($5), and excellent house wines. Several value-priced South American selections can be found, like Morandé Pionero sauvignon blanc ($6, per glass; $22, bottle) from Chile and Bodini malbec ($7, per glass; $28, bottle) from Argentina.

A pricey designer burger plus a stingy pour of wine is a formula too easy to find in this city, and one which First Printer happily flouts. Value that exceeds expectations is rare, one might even say old-fashioned. With a nod to its history, First Printer provides a hearty welcome in the here and now, and an experience worth repeating. ×××

Q: WHAT DO YOU RECOMMEND FOR SUNSCREEN?

A: I founded SkinHealth 14 years ago when my sister died of melanoma, the most deadly form of skin cancer, at the age of 40.

I recommend a broad spectrum UVA/UVB sunscreen that has a SPF of 30 or more, and contains at least 5% micronized zinc oxide to protect against UVA rays, which are the most dangerous rays. Zinc oxide creates a physical barrier to the radiation and deflects it from your skin.

It is very important to read the label on sunscreens to determine the amount of zinc oxide in the product. If the percentage of zinc oxide is not listed, then there is most likely not enough in the product to be effective.

At SkinHealth we have created a variety of sunscreens that have a high SPF and contain between 5% to 17% zinc oxide. These are invisible on the skin, chemical-free, water resistant, and unlike many other sunscreens, contain no fragrance and are not greasy. Powerful anti-oxidants, such as green tea, have also been added to SkinHealth sunscreens for extra protection against free-radical damage caused by UV rays.

May is Skin Cancer awareness month, so take a minute to analyze the label on your sunscreen to ensure it will give you the high level of protection you deserve.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY

Joss Whedon aims to break box office records and half of New York City with this star-studded splash.

The Avengers ★★★
Starring Robert Downey Jr., Chris Evans, Mark Ruffalo, Scarlett Johansson, Chris Hemsworth, Jeremy Renner, Tom Hiddleston and Samuel L. Jackson. Written and directed by Joss Whedon. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

THE MOST EXPENSIVE superhero movie ever made, combining characters from four different franchises, kicks off with a bunch of nameless characters being dispatched in an indifferently photographed sequence, with the stakes so low it takes place near a crummy parking lot.

Lucky for us, it gets better.

Everybody is after something called the Tesseract—that gleaming cosmic cube you might remember showing up in Thor and Captain America: The First Avenger. Thor's jerkoff brother, Loki (Tom Hiddleston), was banished to some sort of tacky netherworld in the Norse God's sadly Crocodile Dundee–ish film last summer, but here he returns aching to take out Earth for no real reason. Basically he's just around to make the Avengers finally assemble.

I'm assuming you remember the post-credit stingers from umpteen Marvel movies over the past couple years, when Samuel L. Jackson intrudes on superhero origin stories, wearing an eye patch and a leather coat, in order to set up this picture.

Well it's finally here. Thanks to Loki's shenanigans, we've got Robert Downey Jr. as the insouciant Iron Man, always impatiently waiting for cocktail hour. There's also Chris Evans' soul-sick Captain America, while Chris Hemsworth's god of thunder Thor drifts in from Asgard just fine, despite his last picture leaving him stranded. (A single line of dialogue undoes that entire film, so kiss your continuity good-bye, comic store gents!) Also, Scarlett Johansson and Jeremy Renner wear a lot of black leather and seem to work for the government.

> It's a boy's dream project in which Earth's mightiest heroes all get together and break stuff.

Then there's my favorite, the sad-eyed Bruce Banner. He may have been renowned across the world as a brilliant scientist, but every time he gets angry the poor guy turns green and smashes things. We've already seen two pictures in which the Hulk failed to impress, with Eric Bana and Edward Norton failing miserably to convey a dude with a unique difficulty controlling his temper. Kudos to writer/director Joss Whedon for recasting Mark Ruffalo, the most laid-back actor in movies right now. The conflict between Ruffalo's easy-peasy line readings and their inevitable aftermath is frankly hilarious.

The Avengers is a juggling act, and Whedon, the Buffy the Vampire Slayer auteur, knows his way around recurring characters from years on TV. The downside is that this picture is often hampered by flat, sitcom staging. But that hardly matters when you're watching a big-screen answer to every dorky kid's hypothetical questions: What would happen if Thor fought the Hulk? And could Captain America beat them both?

The film is barely four scenes long, with Whedon gathering the franchises together to form a formidable army of costumed superheroes who all kind of hate each other at first.

There's some to-do about a portal that opens up over New York City, where alien invaders can cruise in and get knocked off by our gang with barely a moment's interest. The movie also contains a mite too much fan service, with Whedon pausing for applause breaks every time a character does something cool.

But despite the rocky start, it's eventually one big payoff after another. It's a boy's dream project in which Earth's mightiest heroes all get together and break stuff.

I just wish there was more to it. A friend jokes that Judd Apatow could make a two-and-a-half hour movie out of Downey's playboy Tony Stark teaching Thor and Captain America how to be pimps. He's not wrong, as the spectacle here is strictly so-so, and what works best are the character interactions. The banter is the real reason to see this movie.

I adored Downey and Ruffalo, having a quiet Zodiac reunion and talking technical gobbledygook about gamma rays when they both should probably be doing Beckett onstage somewhere. I love the way Chris Evans underplays Captain America as a lost soul adrift in modern times, a walking anachronism who can't believe how disappointing everybody has become since the 1940s.

Whedon even elicits a terrific performance from Scarlett Johansson. His camera does her no favors, but his script does.

SALVATION ARMY

Edward Sharpe & the Magnetic Zeros transcend negative norms with communal joy.

Edward Sharpe & the Magnetic Zeros play at the Orpheum Theatre on May 12.

AS THE BEARDED, messianic frontman of Edward Sharpe & the Magnetic Zeros, Alex Ebert has heard labels like "hippie" and "cult" leveled at him and his sprawling indie-folk troupe. But he heard an unusual description the other day on Hollywood Boulevard.

"I was sitting on the sidewalk with my girlfriend, just hanging out, and all these people were passing by in this very populated, touristy section," he recalls. "And this dude walks up and leans over to me and says, 'It's all right, man, I'm Amish, too.'"

None of this seems to faze the singer, who casts the passerby's comment as an inclusive gesture. On the other hand, Ebert says he doesn't even identify with labels like "white" or "American," much less others he calls "inconsequential."

"Hippie sounds pretty broad, and I know that it's pejorative, but I don't really mind," says Ebert, 34. "Maybe one day I'll be in a place where I'm like, 'This is my dogma.' But I'm not quite comfortable with that yet—and probably never will be. It's important at the moment, while we're still learning, to be open to everything."

> "If we can raise the energy to a transcendent point, that's the most powerful moment."

The same attitude applies to the music of Edward Sharpe & the Magnetic Zeros, named after a character that Ebert created for a would-be novel and a theoretical form of mathematics. The band's exuberant, communal and orchestral sound suggests a sweep of '60s pop, soul, gospel, reggae, spaghetti Westerns and mariachi music as well as Dylan, Donovan and the Jefferson Airplane.

It's an about-face from Ebert's previous, electro-punk outfit Ima Robot, an experience that landed the singer in a 12-step program. He came out the other side with fresh positivity that fueled the Zeros' aim to "use music as a means of growing up and through the roof that holds you in," Ebert says from Los Angeles.

In concert, the 10-piece band strives for "some sort of union," he says. "I just call it 'breaking the glass ceiling.' If we can raise the energy to a transcendent point, to where the room feels like it's going to lift, that's the most powerful moment."

To that end, the pied piper–like singer often hops into the crowd. "I start wondering why I'm onstage," says Ebert, whose group invades the wide-aisled Orpheum Theatre on May 12. "It's a weird feeling to continue to just face [people] when I keep having urges to be with them."

The congregation grew in the wake of the band's 2009 debut album, Up From Below, particularly its single "Home." That jaunty lope sported a whistled hook that evoked the movie theme from Bridge on the River Kwai, and an exchange between Ebert and cosinger Jade Castrinos sounds as sweet as the banter between Johnny Cash and his wife June, capped by the chorus "Home is wherever I'm with you."

The hoopla over "Home" might've overshadowed the album's quality as a whole. But Ebert says, "Thankfully that song represents a lot of the spirit of what we're about."

Now he and his Magnetic bandmates are ready to reemerge with a follow-up album, Here, to be released on May 29. One of the songs most likely to draw attention is "I Don't Wanna Pray," a bare-bones Dixieland hoedown that opens with the chant: "I love my God, God made love. I love my God, God made hate."

"It's dangerous territory because it's easily misunderstood," Ebert says, "[it's] language that everyone has a very set and usually hyper-positive or hyper-prejudiced attitude toward."

So how does he explain the song? "The ideal version of spirituality—or being—is just being, and not having to kneel," Ebert says. "A lot of this album seems very meditative and calmer than our first album. But underlying that is a real defiance."

In turn, the band will address life's darker side on another album due out later this year. "The thing I got growing up from a lot of people is 'It's a dog-eat-dog world' and 'This is how it is,'" Ebert says. "Knowing how it's been and how it is, and still having a childish sort of attitude, is extremely defiant and almost self-destructive in the most beautiful sense." ✖✖✖

CRASH COURSE

The travails of accepting an exercise challenge

Read more at improper.com/blogs.

BACK IN JANUARY, I made the fateful decision to sign up for the Gold's Gym 90 Day Challenge. From February through April, I'd be compelled to hit the gym at least four times a week or be booted from the challenge. If you're like me, you'd say, "Four days a week? Easy. I do that anyway!" Guess what? You don't do that anyway.

Keeping track of your gym days makes you realize how much life interferes with exercise. In February alone, I had an overnight business trip, a bout with the norovirus and the arrival of a new kid. Which was great, don't get me wrong (the baby, not the norovirus). But that event cost me three gym days and forced me to pull a 2004 Red Sox ALCS 4-0 run to maintain my challenge eligibility.

On the first day of February, I asked my wife what she wanted me to look like by the end of April. She said, "Brad Pitt in Fight Club." Of course, I assume that she said that only because she was afraid to voice her true desire, which is that I develop the bulky undefined musculature of a recreational boater who's lounging on a sandbar drinking light beer and listening to Limp Bizkit somewhere on the Florida panhandle. Got that mental image? OK, now imagine that guy without the tan. That's my physique, post–90 Day Challenge.

To put it another way, I'm a handlebar mustache away from looking like a turn-of-the-century strongman. I'm fat-jacked, in the manner of a husky toddler. But fat-jacked is better than just fat.

For the first couple weeks of the challenge, I took advantage of free fitness boot camp on Saturday mornings. Boot camp typically entailed me and three or four older ladies being forced into stress positions by a diabolical female trainer who might be the strongest person I've ever met. I'd walk in carrying 20-pound metal dumbbells, and she'd confiscate them and hand me dainty little orange ones that looked like rubber-coated Chihuahua femurs. "I don't want you to hurt yourself," she'd say. And sure enough, those tiny weights quickly made it seem like my ligaments were being torn asunder by the razor claws of Beelzebub's very hellhounds. Meanwhile, the trainer would be doing the same exercise, smiling, using the 20-pounders that she took from me. I didn't make it to many boot camps.

I'm fat-jacked, in the manner of a husky toddler. But fat-jacked is better than just fat.

Left to my own devices, I reverted to my traditional meathead workout regime. Which means that I probably didn't improve my lung capacity or my flexibility or lower my blood pressure, but I did yeoman's work on the health metric that's really relevant to everyday life: the bench press.

After three months of rippin' sets and flexing reps, my maximum bench press reached 280 pounds. That's not much in the weight-lifting world, but it's top of the food chain in the writing world. Anything approaching 300 pounds, and you're in the realm of the really badass wordsmiths—I'm talking Andre Dubus III, Sebastian Junger, Marilyn vos Savant.

But what's the point of bench press, you ask? Well, say I get jumped by some hipsters who are angry that I disparaged fixed-gear bicycles. That's where bench press comes in. Yes, bench press helps you with fighting. I mean, I think it does. I've never been in a fight, because everyone knows how much I bench press.

When I weighed in at the start of the challenge, I was 194 pounds. Three months later, I'm 194. At least some of those pounds, though, have morphed from fat to muscle. The circumference of my thigh is three inches leaner. My hips are nearly four inches narrower. My gut, however, is exactly the same.

Yet somehow it looks worse than ever. I suspect that by improving some parts of my body, I've only drawn more attention to the problem areas. It's like how if you repaint the walls on your house, you then realize that the floor needs refinishing and your couch has a big fat gut. I mean, your couch is outdated. What did I say the first time?

The trainer guy at the gym says that if I want to tone my midriff area, then exercise alone won't do it. He says I'll need to dye it. So I went ahead and dyed my chest hair bright orange. It does draw the eye upward.

I ask the trainer what I'm supposed to do now that the 90 Day Challenge is over. "Just keep doing it," he says. I'm supposed to indefinitely pretend that I'm part of a contest that I have no chance of winning? That gets old even for Newt Gingrich.

Alas, the challenge is over. But I'm still training. I'm training to work as a mall Santa next winter, no padding required. Now get over here and spot me, Marilyn. ✖✖✖

2 NFL DRAFTERTHOUGHTS

OH, BILLY BOY Wait a second. You're telling me that draft-pick-hoarder Bill Belichick traded up TWICE to take TWO big name defensive blue chippers? All right! The man's a genius! Here comes another ring! (Unless Jones and Hightower don't pan out, in which case: "What the hell? Belichick's lost his touch! It's time to walk away!")

UNDER THE RUGBY My favorite late Pats pick? That would be seventh-rounder Nate Ebner, the former world-class rugby player who didn't even play high school football before walking on at Ohio State. (What? Did you expect me to go with the guy who was just arrested for punching a cop?)

5 SOX STORY LINES

BAT AN EYE Pedroia is feeling the love from Valentine.

Big Papi's April Adrian Gonzalez may be the team's most complete hitter. Dustin Pedroia may be the most clutch. But to this point, no one's been better than lean, mean and presumably clean David Ortiz. Papi's now 36 years old and in his 10th season in Boston, but he's leading the troops like it's October 2004. At this rate, he may even get that extension! (No, he probably won't.)

Welcome Aboard There are still a few bad eggs in the clubhouse, but you have to give Ben Cherington and company credit for the fresh faces they've brought in. Cody Ross and Ryan Sweeney are gritty gamers who've helped soften the blow of losing Ellsbury and Crawford; Nick Punto's a great teammate; Kelly Shoppach helped untangle Josh Beckett's panties. Everyone's been great! Well, except Andrew Bailey. But hey, who needs a closer?

Super Setup Just kidding about the closer, because Crazy Alfredo's been fine. And don't look now, but the eighth inning's getting better, too. Franklin Morales assumed the setup role after Mark Melancon proved himself more suited for Little League, and he's served the Sox well ever since. Morales may not be Mike Timlin, Derek Lowe or Ravishing Rich Garces, but he's the best we have, and it could be much, much worse.

Yo, Adrian! I mentioned how Gonzalez is the team's most complete hitter, but after one month he's also the most frustrating. Gonzalez's next memorable hit will be his first, and God knows he's had a ton of chances. (And God also knows how much Adrian loves God, so, for the love of God, why doesn't he help?)

Single White Male Dustin Pedroia and Bobby Valentine got off to a rocky start, but their relationship has quickly blossomed into a torrid love affair. Albeit one-sided. I can't speak for how Pedroia feels about his boss, but there's no question that Bobby V. has fallen hard for Dusty Two Sacks. Can't say I blame him.

4 DATES TO WATCH

5/12: A would-be Game 7 for the Celtics and Hawks. I don't want to say that the NBA's rooting for the C's here, but David Stern's already named Tommy Heinsohn one of the three referees.

5/15: What do you get for the guy who deserves nothing? Josh Beckett turns 32.

5/18: The Sox head down to Philly to visit former friend Jonathan Papelbon and always enemy Roy Halladay. If neither takes the mound, it'll be a great weekend for Boston.

5/19: Kevin Garnett turns 36, but will hopefully be too busy to celebrate.

3 BRUINS OFFSEASON QUESTIONS

Is It Really Over? Well, that sucked. While we knew it was a long shot for the Bruins to repeat, we figured they'd at least survive a few rounds. Instead, it took only seven stupid games for the B's to cough up the Cup, and it'll be five long months before they take the ice again. Speaking of which: Has anyone heard from Jack Edwards? The man might need a hug.

Is Tim Thomas on the Way Out? I think so. Tuukka Rask has played second fiddle long enough; he's ready for more. And even if Tuukka isn't quite on Timmy's level, what the B's lose in skill they'll make up for in not having to deal with "The Tim Thomas Sideshow"—in an election year, at that.

What's Next for Tyler Seguin? In one year, the kid went from overwhelmed rookie to the Bruins' leading scorer, and he still has a long way to go before he's done developing. So what's on tap for 2013? I say he either becomes the B's first 100-point scorer since Jumbo Joe, or the world's first 20,000-women scorer since Wilt.

1 ONE SAD GOOD-BYE

It's all too common to hear stories about ex-NFL players finding trouble after football, but nothing—not even his scary incident two years back—could've prepared us for Junior Seau's apparent suicide. Just awful. His Pats years may not have been his best years, but Seau was always an easy guy to root for.

Soroff On BERNADETTE PETERS

The stage and screen star tells us about fans, critics and never having seen Evita.

ON MAY 9, BROADWAY, FILM AND TV SUPERSTAR BERNADETTE PETERS, 64, will perform at Opening Night at Pops (with further appearances scheduled this summer at Tanglewood). Born and raised in New York, Peters has starred in such plays as Gypsy, The Goodbye Girl, Into the Woods and Sunday in the Park With George. She's been in 17 films, including Pennies From Heaven, The Jerk and Silent Movie, while her recordings are too numerous to list. She's been nominated for, and won, several Tony, Grammy, Golden Globe, Drama Desk and other awards. She's active with Broadway Cares/Equity Fights AIDS and the Gay Men's Health Crisis. Together with her friend Mary Tyler Moore she created Broadway Barks, which benefits animal shelters. Peters lives in New York and Los Angeles.

Jonathan Soroff: Fantasy duet partner?
Bernadette Peters: Frank Sinatra, but it's too late, unless I do one of those thingamajigs where they use old footage. Like when Natalie Cole sang with her father.

Favorite Broadway theater to perform in?
I try never to get attached to a theater because the chances of going back are slim, although I must say that I've gone back to the Marquis three times. I will say that to play the Schubert was a thrill, and I'd love to play the Winter Garden and the Broadway.

Weirdest stage door experience?
They're just very touching more than weird. You get a lot of people who come and it's very sweet, although sometimes it's just autograph hounds. You don't have the same ones anymore. Years ago, you had people who that was kind of their life, y'know?

How about weirdest thing you were ever asked to autograph?
Somebody's arm, and then they tattooed my name on it permanently. He's a great guy, a big fan, and that's what he wanted.

Most amazing dressing room visit?
One who comes to mind was Jerry Lewis. I was like, "Oh, my God!" He's an icon.

What's the secret to your hair?
To quote Lady Gaga, "I was born this way." When I was younger, it was a curse, because there weren't any products to put in it. Then finally I just let it be what it really is.

How do you feel about critics?
I don't read them too much. Sometimes The Times gets delivered to my door, but otherwise, I don't read reviews at all.

Why not?
When you're in a show, you go back and do it again the next night. So if they say something is awful, you're self-conscious. Or if they pick out a moment, and say, "When she did that, it was so brilliant, blah, blah, blah..." Then that moment is gone forever.

Favorite movie of yours?
I suppose if you look at it as a movie, Pennies From Heaven is an amazing film.

What's your advice to young people who want to be the next Bernadette Peters?
The advice I was given was never to copy anyone. You don't want to be the next anything. You want to be an original. And the way that happens is to make sure that everything just comes right out of you in its most honest form.

Are dogs better company than most people?
Yes. Easy answer.

Is there a role you ever wanted to play that you didn't—Evita or Lady Macbeth?
Maybe I'd like to creep into the classic plays, Tennessee Williams, or something.

Favorite songwriter from the American songbook?
Stephen Sondheim.

Are you a fan of Andrew Lloyd Weber?
He writes beautiful melodies. In fact, you mentioned Evita. I've never seen it, and I have to go see it with Ricky Martin. It may sound strange, but I never have.

What do you think of the Disneyfication of Broadway?
I think anything that makes Broadway popular is a good thing, because you have young people who want to go to the theater and might start seeing less obvious shows.

Is the TV show Smash realistic?
As realistic as TV gets. What they do is take things that may have happened in a bunch of different productions, and they put them all together, so there's a lot of drama.

Best play you recently saw?
I just went for a second time to Death of a Salesman. Instead of being "the great American play," it was like, "Oh, my God, I'm in these people's living room. I'm in this person's life." The acting is amazing. The last time I went, I thought, this is so painful, but it's so beautiful. I went with my friend Elaine Stritch, and she said, "You know, maybe three times in the course of going to the theater do you see acting like this." She's seen quite a bit.

New York or L.A.?
I love both, but my dogs are here in New York. There's a great energy here, but in L.A., I get into this healthy cycle where I get up, meet my trainer at the gym, go meet my friends for sashimi. It's a very healthy way to live.

Do you think people in show business are more resilient than us civilians?
There are so many different personality types, though, and people go into it for so many different reasons. If you look at it as a really tough business, I suppose you could say, yes, but you can look at it as a really creative, artistic world, which I guess is the way I look at it. And it's a real privilege to be part of it. I think you find resilience everywhere in life.

Song you'd most like to be remembered for, or associated with?
I don't want to be remembered for one particular song. I want to be remembered for an experience—"We went to see her do her show and..." I don't want to be famous for one thing, because then I'm pigeonholed, and I don't like to be pigeonholed. ×××

ANDY COHEN

...can't SHUT the hell UP.

The ringleader of Bravo's cultural circus gets personal.

By Kyle Wright

Photographs by Clay Patrick McBride

Styling: Doreen Hoff; grooming: Rosemory Redlin/Anderson Hopkins

It's April 4 at Rockefeller Center and Andy Cohen's small Watch What Happens: Live studio is more cramped than usual. He's used to the insanity, rubbing elbows with guests like Tina Fey or Jerry Seinfeld five nights a week, but tonight is the big Bravo upfront—industry speak for when a network announces its new programming in a bid for advertising dollars—and the first-ever Watch What Happens: Live All-Stars Party. His "clubhouse" is swarming with nearly every star in the offbeat network's galaxy. Celebrity stylist Brad Goreski, of It's a Brad, Brad World, mingles with $120-million mogul Bethenny Frankel while the Shahs of Sunset work the step-and-repeat. Comedian Kathy Griffin is certainly taking note of who hates whom for her act, while LuAnn de Lesseps performs one of her Auto-Tuned dance numbers surrounded by her fellow Real Housewives of New York City. It's the type of campy collision course that Cohen, 43, would've dreamed up as a goofy, pop-culture–obsessed kid in St. Louis. It's a world that Bravo's executive vice president of programming and development created with a very specific viewer in mind: himself.

Bravo loves to cast experts in aspirational lifestyles, like Jeff Lewis of Flipping Out and Interior Therapy With Jeff Lewis or fashion megastylist Rachel Zoe, and Cohen is no different. The tale of an All My Children-obsessed teen who worked his way up from intern to producer to TV host is pretty much as aspirational as you can get. "There is a feeling of a lifestyle choice when you watch this network," says Frances Berwick, president of Bravo and Style Media. "These are the type of people you want to hang out with."

The Cohen beloved by viewers is the quick, occasionally catty and easily excitable host asking Housewives hard-hitting questions like "Alexis, do you think God approves of your plastic surgery?" or "Sonja, was your vagina rude to Kelly?" His new memoir, Most Talkative, (he won that superlative in high school, along with "Biggest Gossip") gives a more profound view of Cohen before the glitz, recalling his childhood in Missouri, where he spent every minute trying to escape the boredom of suburbia with shows like Battle of the Network Stars or fawning over Tiger Beat cutouts of the Osmonds or Diana Ross. It's part love letter to All My Children actress Susan Lucci, part cautionary tale (don't ever try to trick Oprah Winfrey into giving an interview she initially declined, ever) and part celebration of the glamorous existence he's built around Bravo.

It's a far cry from the persona of a giddy gay-guy in a well-cut suit he embodies today. Cohen finally made it out of Missouri when he enrolled as a broadcast journalism major at Boston University in 1986. Attracted to the diversity of the urban campus, he contributed to the Free Press (for which he interviewed one Miss Susan Lucci), interned at WZLX and worked at a Grateful Dead pushcart in Faneuil Hall, where he spent a day chasing Lisa Whelchel (better known as Blair from The Facts of Life) around while she shopped. Still in the closet, he'd hang at bars like Our House and Father's Too with his gaggle of girlfriends and roommate Dave Ansel, but occasionally sneak off to gay clubs like Chaps in Copley Square.

Acceptance into BU's London Programme (he hates the spelling, too) marked the biggest change in the young Cohen's life. Being so far removed from family and friends forced him to confront his sexuality. In high school, he had been largely asexual and "one of the girls," but after a brief tryst in Paris, there was no turning back. When he finally came out of the closet, he experienced predictably awkward conversations but received resounding support from loved ones.

Most Talkative goes on the record with incidents like the time Cohen posed nude for photographer Spencer Tunick in front of the New York Public Library, and when he danced onstage with the B-52's. But it doesn't shine a light into the bedroom. "I purposefully stayed away from anything that has to do with my social life in New York right now," he says. "The process of writing a book about yourself is so self-indulgent anyway. You have to separate yourself and say, 'I'm going to write a funny book,' or, 'I'm going to write some stories that I think people would enjoy.' It takes self-indulgence to another level if I'm going to start writing about my relationships."

As a producer for CBS This Morning, 48 Hours and The Early Show, Cohen palled around with pop-culture bombshells like the Buttafuocos and Tammy Faye Messner's (formerly Bakker, with the eyelashes) Yorkshire terrier, Tuppins. Chasing stories around the country trained his eye to spot big personalities. It's a necessary skill if you're launching shows like Housewives and Top Chef.

School Daze
Cohen spent his time at Boston University palling around with best friend Dave Ansel, interning at WZLX and selling Grateful Dead gear from a Faneuil Hall pushcart.

While CBS offered the thrill of the unexpected—traipsing through Utah with Dan Rather and Don Imus, reporting from Oklahoma City after the bombings—it also required incessant travel and a ragged quality of life. So, in 2000, Cohen left CBS to become vice president of original programming at the small cable network Trio. There he met Lauren Zalaznick, now chairman of entertainment & digital networks and integrated media at NBCUniversal, who recruited Cohen to Bravo when Trio folded.

In the mid-2000s, Bravo was fast evolving. They'd made a splash with Queer Eye for the Straight Guy (a show that Cohen had wanted for Trio) and extended their brand beyond Inside the Actors Studio. With Cohen's arrival, competitive shows like Project Runway and Top Chef, mixed with the absurdity of Being Bobby Brown and Kathy Griffin: My Life on the D-List, became watercooler talking points. And then, in 2006, came The Real Housewives of Orange County and a half-billion-dollar empire was born. During the initial development of that first season, Cohen insisted on having cameras dig deeper into the personal lives of the women being filmed, which provided a soapy and more relatable context for each televised brawl.

The Housewives franchise has since landed in Atlanta, New York City, Miami, Washington, D.C., New Jersey and Beverly Hills—rumors continue to swirl that Dallas is next—while international spinoffs have cropped up in Greece, Israel and Canada. It's an anthropological experiment that's been mocked on Saturday Night Live and reviled by talking heads everywhere. It should come as no surprise that Cohen is still in charge of casting. These ladies have an awful lot in common

Taking His Licks
Cohen gets up close and personal with Uggie, the scene-stealing Jack Russell terrier from The Artist.

Girls Gone Wild
Cheryl Hines and Rachel Dratch let loose on a recent episode of Watch What Happens: Live.

"PEOPLE ASK, 'WHEN ARE YOU GOING TO DO A REALITY SHOW?' AND I'M LIKE, 'I DO... EVERY NIGHT AT 11!'" with Susan Lucci's Erica Kane on All My Children, namely confidence, a flair for the dramatic and a touch of crazy.

As popularity grew, Cohen began blogging about his behind-the-scenes antics, sprinkling in pop-culture bon mots as he saw fit. "He was starting to become our pop-culture pundit and would do the odd TV interview to talk about the shows that were coming up that were culturally relevant," says Berwick. "His opinion was being sought."

Watch What Happens: Live was born as a Web series before becoming an occasional aftershow for big episodes of Bravo's landmark series. "I think that one of our fears when we took this from an online show to a TV show was that it would feel rehearsed, or we would lose the spontaneity. Number one, it had to be live and secondly, it has to be a different type of show."

Cohen thrives on awkward moments, so much so that the entire premise of Watch What Happens: Live seems built around humiliating his guests and himself. With cocktails in hand, the show largely features Cohen discussing the day's events with guests pulled from a pool of Bravo personalities and celebs. Buds like Kelly Ripa, Anderson Cooper and Sarah Jessica Parker have all joined him to play offbeat games or talk about who NeNe Leakes happens to be fighting with this week.

"People always ask me, 'When are you going to do a reality show?' and, I'm like, 'I do! I have a live show every night at 11,'" laughs Cohen. "It's pretty revealing to talk about what's on your mind every day."

"There is no pre-interview," says Berwick. "We don't talk to the guests about what they're going to say. He does all kinds of crazy games and puts them on the spot, but it's a comfortable environment because it's a very small and intimate set, and people feel like they're sitting with Andy in his living room."

For Cohen, the success of Watch What Happens: Live is measured beyond ratings and A-list bookings. "There's strength in being an out gay man on TV who just happens to be gay—I'm not hosting a gay TV show," says Cohen, the first openly homosexual man to host a late-night talk show. "I hope to be part of a movement of people who are just being themselves on TV, so a kid in St. Louis today growing up can say, 'Oh, that guy's gay? He seems all right.'"

Watch What Happens: Live marked a shift in Bravo's programming. Based on the show's success, it launched a weekly interview series with Kathy Griffin, whom Cohen describes as the queen of the network. The 2012–2013 season will bring a 27 percent increase in original programming, including two scripted series, an unexpected entry for a network built on outrageous documentary TV. Among the new series are Housewives spinoffs and reality shows following the likes of meme master Ben Huh and a group of Los Angeles therapists.

With a new book, his show and remaining duties managing talent for Housewives and Top Chef, Cohen will be entering into what's shaping up to be a milestone season for the busier-than-ever network. Then again, he's spent the last year writing Most Talkative while transitioning his show into a five-nights-per-week affair, so maybe he's used to the pace. Says Berwick, "The worst thing you can say about Andy is that he makes you feel like you're underachieving around him." ×××

ALL FOR THE NOOKIE

BY SHELBY CARIGNAN

Fenway Park executive chef and Cambridge native Steve "Nookie" Postal → competes with 11 other chefs in Around the World in 80 Plates, an Amazing Race/Top Chef hybrid premiering May 9 on Bravo.

HOW ARE YOU PREPARING FOR REALITY-TV FAME?

It's getting ridiculous, people are sending me pictures, like someone last night sent me a picture of myself [in an ad] on a phone booth, and I didn't even know they had phone booths anymore. But it's kind of crazy, like people are stopping me in the streets and it's a little weird, just from seeing the commercials.

WHY THIS SHOW AND NOT TOP CHEF?

Top Chef is cool, but it was a great opportunity for me to travel around the world. It's a little weird with cameras following you everywhere. At first, I was self-conscious, but I've got nothing to hide.

YOU'VE SPENT TIME LIVING IN UMBRIA AND BARCELONA. DID THOSE EXPERIENCES GIVE YOU AN UPPER HAND AGAINST THE OTHER COMPETITORS WHEN YOU WERE TRAVELING?

Feels like it was a different life. When I was there I was submersed in the Italian and Spanish communities, but I don't think it really affected how I did on the show.

ON AROUND THE WORLD, YOU TAKE OVER RESTAURANTS IN EACH CITY YOU VISIT, AND BOTH LOCAL PATRONS AND FOOD AMBASSADORS LIKE WOLFGANG PUCK TEST YOUR EFFORTS. HOW DO YOU MEET THOSE KIND OF EXPECTATIONS WHILE STILL BRINGING PERSONAL FLAIR TO YOUR COOKING?

It's really tough, because you want to be yourself but you want to be... what's the word I'm looking for? You want to be respectful of the other cultures. It's really tricky to balance that with trying to be yourself.

AFTER A BIG RED SOX WIN, WHAT KIND OF MEAL DO YOU TREAT THEM TO?

The joke around here is that we treat them well when they're winning and not so well when they're down. [Laughs.] The Sox have lots of ups and downs, but really we try to stay steady and not get involved. All of us who work at Fenway are obviously huge Sox fans. We don't really deal with the players too much, but for things like the 100th anniversary game, we see lots of special people.

YOU'VE SAID THAT YOU WANT TO OPEN YOUR OWN PLACE. IN A PERFECT WORLD, WHAT DOES YOUR DREAM RESTAURANT LOOK LIKE? WHAT KIND OF FOOD ARE YOU SERVING?

In a perfect world, my restaurant is somewhere on the Red Line in Cambridge with a kind of Party of Five situation. I'm still looking for it, though. If anyone knows of a 5,000-square-foot spot on the Red Line in Cambridge, hit me up on Twitter @chefnookie. I really want more followers; I only have 70. I want to be like Justin Bieber—doesn't he have 45 million? I'm 10 times cooler than he is. Why don't I have that many followers? As far as the food for my restaurant, it's all going to depend on the location and size of the place I get. I'm going to play it by ear.

WHAT'S YOUR FAVORITE PLACE IN BOSTON TO EAT?

Favorite place in Boston? That's a huge question! I just went to the Painted Burro in Davis Square; that was really good. But if I had to have my last meal in Boston, I'd go to the Midwest Grill. They come around with meat on swords, and it's super salty. It's really good. Probably one of the most underrated restaurants. Also Toro is great.

How two brothers turned an island vibe into a retail empire.

WHALE OF A TALE

AMID THE DOCKSIDE DECOR OF Shep and Ian Murray's Stamford, Conn., office hangs a bookshelf of telling titles. Propped up, like pillars of wisdom, are Walter Isaacson's biography of Steve Jobs and Susanna Salk's A Privileged Life: Celebrating WASP Style. For the founders of Vineyard Vines, the Jobsian tropes of detail, design and knowing your audience, wedded to a preppy faith in the cute, have proven the key to riches.

Growing up in Greenwich, Conn., and summering in Edgartown on Martha's Vineyard, the brothers were to the manner, if not the money, of prepsters born. Dad was a luxe-travel writer, so Shep and Ian lived in a charmed environment of good schools, fabulous summers and exotic trips, even if the minibars in their lavish hotel rooms were off-limits, as Shep remembers. Today, never mind the minibars. They could buy the hotels.

Whimsy is very serious business for the brothers, who own Vineyard Vines outright (an older brother, Graham, is not involved in the company). In 1998, they chucked their corporate cadet roles in Manhattan, pooled their credit cards, created a product, hawked it person-to-person at Vineyard beaches, bars and parking lots on the Fourth of July, and built one of the fastest-growing businesses in the country. Since shilling their neckwear that hot holiday, they have more or less lived their corporate motto: "Every day should feel this good."

With their wives and children, the brothers still live near Greenwich, with homes on the Vineyard. They work out of a nearby 36,000-square-foot former clutch factory where they embed a nautical New England vibe into an apparel and accessories operation with sales of an estimated $100 million.

"EVERY YEAR WE HAVE ONE CONSTANT, THOSE THREE MONTHS ON THE VINEYARD."

"It's not just the pink boxes, the whale logo. It's not just that we make a product," says Shep, 41, "we create a lifestyle." The lifestyle conceit—comfortable enough in your own skin to wear goofy hats to the Kentucky Derby and whale belts year-round—speaks to celebs such as Bill Clinton, Brett Favre and Miley Cyrus, not to mention both George Bushes. (Their "tie-partisan" patterns feature both donkeys and elephants.) The "Vines" name was "totally fabricated by us," says Ian, 37, a thinner, more intense rendition of his affable, tousled older brother. "It sounded good, and left us room to grow the brand, unlike, say, Vineyard Ties."

In 1998, Shep, a Skidmore grad, had held a pedestrian position in the ad biz for two years, following a stint as a New York Stock Exchange trader. Ian, with a freshly minted bachelor's in English from Lafayette College, was testing the waters of PR. They wanted to escape. So, as the corporate legend goes, they got drunk and decided to sell ties.

Whose idea was it? Shep demurs, sort of. "I quit my job first," he admits, "but Ian quit five minutes later. I was a little ahead of the curve in wanting out. I'd been wearing ties four years more than Ian."

The brothers raised $8,000 in start-up money from credit card cash advances and produced 400 ties. On July 3, Shep delivered a batch to stores open for the holiday. Over the next few days, Shep and Ian sold the rest, at $65 each, out of Shep's 1982 Jeep. Four of the original ties, with the four original designs (Vineyard signs, Jeeps and bass, an island and whale, bluefish) are enshrined in a glass frame on the wall of their Greenwich store.

It wasn't a completely new approach, of course. In 1990, the juice guys began selling Nantucket

Nectars off their boat. "Tom (Scott) and Tom (First) delivered an experience, not just juice," says Shep, who's a friend of Scott's. "We've always strived to provide an experience and lifestyle for our customers, not just clothing. Their business was an inspiration to us when we started."

The initial foray was so successful, Ian told Shep "we're never going to have to work again." But aware of the perils of family businesses, one of their first acts was to hire a lawyer to draft an operating agreement. Says Shep, "We sit in the same office, we eat lunch together every day, we've always been close and have continued to be throughout this crazy journey, but I can't lie. We butt heads."

Shep observes that he takes the lead on prints and patterns. "Ian's more fit and wash and color. He has a more conservative approach, but it ebbs and flows."

Their frat-boy-meets-Miss-Porter's élan fared well during the dotcom bubble. The company grew five times or more each year during its beginning. That "slowed" to tripling in the latter part of the decade. Now, recession aside, it's settled into about 20 percent growth a year and 500 employees, claims Ian. There are no outside investors.

"We kept showing up on the Inc. 500," says Lindsey Worster, vice president of brand communications, "and we were inundated by people who wanted a piece. That's why we don't even give out numbers anymore."

Along with retaining independence, the company is very aware of iconography. While Lacoste has his crocodile, Ralph Lauren his polo, Lilly Pulitzer her prints, for Vineyard Vines' target audience—the effortlessly unaffected—there's a pink whale. Achingly cute, it nonetheless has pedigree. The mascot derives from wooden carvings of whales done by their late father, Stanley Murray, in the traditional Vineyard mode. The original from their childhood home is now in the gala Greenwich store.

While the company's standalone retail outlets comport to ritzy neighborhoods, even the mall shops are oases of luxe. "We have bright colors, clean bathrooms, courtesy bottles of water, friendly service, large-screen TVs if there's a football game on, video games for the kids," says Ian.

The company does little paid advertising, relying instead on ardent lifestyle branding—even their colors have names like "Putting Green" and "Mulligan." Retail employees and workers at headquarters are asked to wear Vineyard Vines clothes, making it a touch more Stepford than Stamford. But Ian—indistinguishable from a salesclerk in his shirt, shorts and whale belt—shrugs. "We want people to be comfortable, and dress the part." The company now sports 19 stores and is sold in more than 600 locations.

A tribute to their ingenuity comes from no less than Charlie Davidson, the fabled haberdasher from the Andover Shop in Harvard Square. "They went into the necktie business when it was becoming dead," says Davidson, who Tipping Point author Malcolm Gladwell called the most connected person in the country. "They have a great level of taste. Very, very popular in the country club world."

"Some people compare us to J. Crew or Brooks Brothers because we make the same thing," says Worster. "But we have a unique niche." Locally, in addition to their flagship store in Edgartown, the Murrays operate shops in Nantucket, the Prudential Center, Mashpee and Hingham, with plans to expand to more locations in the Boston area soon. "We decide where to go next by looking at the traffic on our websites, where are the hot spots," says Ian. "We look at where people expect to see the brand—like coastal communities." They recently launched in the Cape Air terminal at Logan Airport. "Go to JetBlue and a pink whale greets you," says Ian with a chuckle.

The idea for the future is to export New England to places like Memphis and Newport Beach. The latest store to open is in Richmond, Va., and the brand is eyeing more Southern college towns, which the brothers' instincts tell them are receptive to pink pants and golf ties.

Propping his flip-flop–clad feet on an old coffee table, Ian muses, "As we get older, the Vineyard becomes more important." The table is a legacy from their childhood home. Prominent in their office are other Vineyard talismans, from the photo of the brothers sailing with Walter Cronkite to Striped Bass & Bluefish Derby pins, with badge numbers.

"Life pulls people all around the world," he adds, "but every year, we have one constant, those three months at the Vineyard." ✖✖✖

DAYS OF WINE AND OYSTERS

BEING MAROONED IN THE Atlantic isn't necessarily something to whine about. Put your sheets to the wind at this year's Nantucket Wine Festival, in which world-famous vintners and celebrity chefs congregate for a weekend of gourmandizing and glamour. More than 200 international wineries pour their wares at the Grand Tasting, while seminars and culinary events keep the preppies lubricated (not to mention lots of Island Creek Oysters and Veuve Clicquot). As the saying goes, eat, drink, and wear whale pants from May 16–20. VIRGINIA BILLY BARRY

The 16th Annual Nantucket Wine Festival runs from May 16–20 in various locations throughout Nantucket (508-228-1128) nantucketwinefestival.com

Reviews by Sean Burns

American Reunion ★★ Presupposing a level of affection for these characters I suspect is shared by very few, this belated fourth installment (not counting the direct-to-video spinoffs) finds Jason Biggs and Co. settling uncomfortably into their 30s. The entire original cast returns to Michigan for a curiously timed 13th high school reunion, presumably comparing notes on how that whole movie stardom thing never quite worked out. Biggs' Jim complains that parenthood has put a stake through evenings with his formerly horny wife (Alyson Hannigan) while the old gang mopes around making references to earlier films. The lone source of amusement is Seann William Scott's Stifler, still sputtering obscenities, partying hard and wondering aloud how he got stuck with this bunch of prematurely old farts. On the bright side, if this makes enough money, maybe Tom Hanks will finally consider my pitch for a Bachelor Party sequel, which will catch up with all those characters now that they've joined AARP. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Cabin in the Woods ★★★ We've all seen this flick before, where a few teens shack up in a cottage for a booze- and hormone-fueled weekend that turns predictably horrific. But what you haven't seen is a nutzoid explanation for where these kinds of pictures come from, and Buffy the Vampire Slayer brain-trust Joss Whedon and Drew Goddard have concocted a snarky deconstruction involving angry gods and a couple of stiffs going through the motions in a high-tech scare factory. Character actors Richard Jenkins and Bradley Whitford spin gold out of Whedon's quips, engineering slasher-film tropes during just another day at the office. Younger members of the cast give game and, at times, quite purposefully awful performances, with Thor's Chris Hemsworth the standout for deliberate inelegance. The joke within a joke eventually escalates to giddy levels of carnage and insanity, yet you find yourself suffering from a weirdly hollow feeling when all is said and done. Clever only gets you so far. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Damsels in Distress ★★★ ½ Writer/director Whit Stillman, sadly MIA since 1998's The Last Days of Disco, returns with his brand of uppity, articulate characters and their lack of self-awareness. Indie it-girl Greta Gerwig stars as Violet, the leader of the in-crowd at the fictional Seven Oaks College who's tirelessly devoted to improving the lives of her fellow students, whether or not they need her assistance. Running a suicide prevention center (the "prevention" part of the sign keeps amusingly falling off), Violet believes there's no psychological problem that can't be cured by free donuts, scented soaps and a vigorous regimen of tap dancing. Loopier and more cartoonish than Stillman's previous pictures, Damsels doesn't progress from scene to scene so much as it lurches through the school year, but the ramshackle effect is curiously enchanting. Stillman eyes even the dimmest of these kids with tremendous affection, until Violet's lifelong ambition to "start an international dance craze" becomes weirdly wistful and almost noble. A fine mess. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and Landmark Embassy.)

Darling Companion ★ Possibly the most inconsequential movie ever made, director Lawrence Kasdan (who wrote the script with his wife, Meg) expects us to spend two hours worrying about a couple of aholes who can't find their dog. Once upon a time, Kasdan wrote The Empire Strikes Back and Raiders of the Lost Ark, before The Big Chill's fluke success turned him into the tiresome poet laureate of baby boomers. Darling Companion finds Kevin Kline and Diane Keaton giving uncharacteristically grating performances as wealthy folks who can't find the pooch after their daughter's wedding at a vacation estate in the mountains. Cinematographer Michael McDonough should hide his head in shame, as the light sources constantly contradict each other and crucial shots remain stubbornly out of focus. This would be embarrassing work for a first-year film student. The fact that a director of Kasdan's stature signed off on such a project must signal his senility. This is a creaky picture in which nothing happens. (At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

The Deep Blue Sea ★★★★ Lush and altogether devastating, director Terence Davies applies his lyrical post-WWII remembrances to Terence Rattigan's play about the inequities of desire. At first it seems an odd fit, with Davies' pregnant pauses colliding against Rattigan's astringent dialogue, but together they build a cumulative impact that just about flattened me. Rachel Weisz delivers a hypnotic performance as a bored housewife who finds herself enthralled by Tom Hiddleston's ill-tempered RAF pilot. Positioning a forgotten birthday as a fulcrum from which the movie drifts back and forth in time, The Deep Blue Sea burrows into the inconvenient truth that sometimes you just love someone more than that person is capable of loving you. Weisz doesn't get all actressy and shrill about it. Indeed, what makes the movie stick in your gut is her resignation from the beginning of this ill-fated affair—the look in her eyes suggesting she already knows exactly how this is all going to end. (At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

The Five-Year Engagement ★★ Jason Segel and Emily Blunt get engaged before the opening credits, so there's no suspense here. What we end up watching is a dirge in which their wedding is constantly delayed in order to serve the title. Cowriter Segel and director Nicholas Stoller have been here before with the wonderful Forgetting Sarah Marshall, but they're better at doing breakups than postponements. When Blunt gets a teaching job in Ann Arbor, Segel ditches his gig as a hotshot San Francisco chef to follow her into the long Michigan winter. Resentment and fake snow abound. There's an interesting movie to be made about spouses giving up their careers to follow the other person's dreams, but this film lacks the guts for such exploration. Instead, we get cheap laughs, a fake beard and a nasty, misogynist undertow. Both leads are charming, but there isn't enough of a movie here to support them. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

God Bless America ★★½ Writer/director Bobcat Goldthwait—the most fascinating and politically minded cast member to emerge from the Police Academy movies—follows up his triumphant 2009 film, World's Greatest Dad, with something slightly less. Bobcat's One Crazy Summer costar Joel Murray, whom you probably last saw wetting himself on Mad Men, appears here as Frank, a cubicle drone diagnosed with an inoperable brain tumor. In response, he goes on a multistate killing spree, cold-bloodedly murdering reality-show stars and Tea Party activists. Goldthwait mercilessly skewers the 24-hour news cycle and everything toxic in pop culture, and elicits a terrific performance by Tara Lynne Barr as the teenager supporting Frank's obsession. But the picture still feels cheap, mowing down easy targets absent of consequence. It's a liberal shooting gallery, and as much fun as his bile might be, Goldthwait isn't a tough enough filmmaker to ask any important questions. A

Social Climbers

A Lie for a Lie

Experimental filmmaker Matías Piñeiro is known for embedding quirky characters into labyrinthine plots. They All Lie, his second feature, continues this trend, weaving Argentine history into a seemingly disconnected group of stories all set in the same house. He'll discuss the film and his craft at the Harvard Film Archive on May 14. Shelby Carignan fantasy for those of us who spend most of the time wanting to shoot our TVs, it's halfway to a great movie. (At the Brattle Theatre.)

The Hunger Games ★ ½ Seabiscuit director Gary Ross' careless version of Suzanne Collins' popular best-seller is my least favorite kind of adaptation—a timid affair so preoccupied with checking off plot points to please the established fanbase that it can't be bothered to engage the uninitiated. Jennifer Lawrence stars as a quick-witted teenage archer tossed into a horrific annual reality-TV tournament, during which poor children are forced to fight to the death for the amusement of the one percent. There's a nasty satirical point being made here, but I'll be damned if Ross knows what it is. Lacking the budget or scope for what's being attempted, this future dystopia is a lot of chintzy costumes, bad wigs and hambone character actors. Presumably attempting to obscure the limited production design and keep the violence to a PG-13 rating, Ross shoots The Hunger Games in jerky ellipses submerged in murky cinematography. Most of the time it's downright impossible to follow what's happening on-screen. I know you loved the book, but this is terrible filmmaking. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

Jeff, Who Lives at Home ★ ½ The DIY pleasantness of directors Jay and Mark Duplass plays just fine on the indie -festival circuit, where slight narratives and a lack of ambition can coast on microbudgeted charm. But in a multiplex production with a cast stocked with stars, the brothers' slacker ethos just translates as lazy. Jason Segel stars as the titular 30-year-old stoner pondering questions of the universe in his mother's basement, while Ed Helms grates as his tacky brother who's worried that his wife (Judy Greer) might be cheating. In a completely disconnected thread, Susan Sarandon turns up as their cubicle-drone mother who's intrigued by the attentions of a secret admirer at the office. Not much at all happens in this picture, which subsists for 90 minutes on improvisation and some shoddy camerawork. The Duplass trademark is to constantly flick the zoom lens for no discernible reason, as if frantically signaling that they're not ready for prime time. (In the suburbs.)

Jiro Dreams of Sushi ★★★ Jiro's sushi restaurant has only 10 seats. If you can get reservations, which book a month in advance, expect to pay upward of $300 a meal for a dining experience that sometimes lasts a mere 15 minutes, while the proprietor gazes impatiently at you as he hands out slices of raw fish. And yet, Sukiyabashi Jiro has received three stars from the Michelin guide, and food critics such as Tokyo's Mashuhrio Yamamoto wax rhapsodic about Jiro Ono's sushi as if it were the second coming. David Gelb's strangely engrossing documentary is foodie-ism at its most monastic. Profiling prickly 85-year-old master chef Jiro Ono, it's mainly a film about the pursuit of perfection. The humorless and disciplined Ono keeps a samurai warrior's code in the kitchen, and it's fascinating to watch the precision of a master at work. Yet the movie flirts with sadness in the margins. As much as we admire the subject's skill and commitment to professionalism, is this really all there is to life? (At Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and West Newton Cinema.)

Lockout ★★ ½ The credit "based on an original idea by Luc Besson" must be a joke, as this B-picture is a shameless rip-off of John Carpenter's Escape From New York, with the jail located in outer space instead of Manhattan. When the president's daughter (Maggie Grace) is held hostage by rioting inmates, it's up to Guy Pearce's badass to rescue her, even if he doesn't exactly want the job. There's also much ado about a stolen briefcase containing some sort of secret, but the story line gets fumbled around in this movie featuring two hours of plot stuffed into 95 minutes. Directors James Mather and Stephen St. Leger must have saved time by scrapping the establishing shots and scene transitions, as Lockout moves in such a hurry it's almost a blur. But Pearce is splendid, letting loose his inner Kurt Russell and responding to every situation with an inexhaustible supply of sarcasm. Fun junk, the movie is so silly that people can parachute to Earth from spaceships. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Three Stooges ★ An act of artistic necrophilia on par with Gus Van Sant's Psycho remake, brothers Peter and Bobby Farrelly's years-in-development "tribute" casts Sean Hayes, Chris Diamantopoulos and Will Sasso as passable imitations of Moe, Larry and Curly. Transplanted to modern times for no discernible reason, the lazy story line finds the stooges searching for $830,000 to save their endangered orphanage, allowing the Farrellys to ramp up the treacle while eliciting a rare, unfunny turn from Larry David as a nun named Sister Mary Mengele. Somewhere in the mix is Sofia Vergara as an adulterous wife plotting to have her husband whacked, with our trio of geniuses inadvertently confounding her plans at every turn. All the nyuk-nyuk's, eye-pokes and bonks on the head are faithfully rendered, albeit staged by the Farrellys with complete indifference to anything resembling comic timing or slapstick precision. Stick with the elegant idiocy of the original stooges, who never would've stooped to jokes about the Kardashians and Jersey Shore. (At Boston Common, Fresh Pond and in the suburbs.)

21 Jump Street ★★★ ½ It won't win any awards, but 21 Jump Street is terrific where you least expect it. Fast, funny and smarter than its demeanor initially lets on, the film stars Channing Tatum and Jonah Hill as an inspired pairing of mismatched dummy cops. The absurdly handsome Tatum has the soul of a clown, and Hill remains a doughy ball of need. What's most enjoyable about the duo's unexpected chemistry is that they seem to genuinely like each other, and often shout it from the rooftops. Theirs is the most effusive bromance we've seen in this unfortunately named genre. Our heroes are tasked with infiltrating a designer drug ring that operates out of a wealthy, suburban high school, and when it gets really interesting, 21 Jump Street becomes more like a dude-comedy remake of Francis Ford Coppola's Peggy Sue Got Married, wondering what you'd do differently, if given a second crack at your teenage years. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

Face the Music

Pattern of Behavior This spring, Norwegian singer/songwriter Ane Brun tours the U.S. for the first time in support of the rerelease of her album It All Starts With One. Crisp, clear vocals are the focus as simple piano ensembles create cavernous spaces filled by Brun's voice. Lyrics like "Do you remember the scars I showed" hang in the air like frost. Catch the album's tracks on May 9 when Brun performs at Brighton Music Hall.

Girl Meets Buoy

Float On Cig Harvey's photographs marry the quotidian to the chimerical using a strange mix of ordinary locales and otherworldly scenes. While her self-portraits run the gamut from intimate to commercial, they never fail to shock the senses and stir the imagination. See her photos, infused with currents of joy, loneliness and contradiction at the Robert Klein Gallery. Her exhibit You Look at Me Like an Emergency runs May 19–June 23. Virginia Billy Barry

ABE & LOUIE'S [793 Boylston Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-536-6300, abeandlouies.com] Abe & Louie's is the quintessential American steakhouse, serving prime cuts of corn fed, Midwestern beef, fresh seafood and garden produce. Steaks are aged on the bone for six weeks to ensure maximum flavor. Signature dishes include the bone-in filet mignon, NY sirloin and swordfish chop. With its high quality food, outstanding service and classic interiors, this award-winning restaurant has consistently remained a Boston favorite since its debut in 1998.

BISTRO DU MIDI [272 Boylston Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-426-7878, bistrodumidi.com] Bistro du Midi showcases authentic Provencal cuisine in a warm, welcoming, and beautiful setting. Inspired by the ingredients and culinary techniques of the Midi region in France, Executive Chef, Robert Sisca presents modern, ingredient-driven creations that are at once refined and approachable. From a carefully conceived charcuterie selection to the freshest seafood, meats and vegetables, Bistro du Midi brings the simple, clean and bold flavors of Provence to Boston.

JOE'S AMERICAN BAR & GRILL [9 locations in the Boston greater area, visit joesamerican.com] Joe's serves classic American comfort food in a comfortable setting, making it a local favorite for lunch, dinner, weekend brunch or take-out. Everything is made in-house, from the famous clam chowder to their juicy burgers or fall-off-the bone ribs. With carved wood, stained glass and vintage lighting, Joe's is reminiscent of your favorite New England watering hole. Try the bloody mary or one of their local beers on tap.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

THE PURPLE SHAMROCK [1 Union Street, Boston, 617-227-2060, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the freedom trail across from Boston City Hall on Union Street. The Purple Shamrock is the perfect place to stop by and have a bite to eat. The fare is composed of New England specialties with burgers, sandwiches, hearty pastas, fresh seafood, tender steaks and other great favorites. Let's not forget their infamous Shamrock Brunch served every Saturday and Sunday that is often paired with live music. After dark, The Purple Shamrock has nightly entertainment with a mix of live music, karaoke and DJ's. At The Purple Shamrock there is something for everyone.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post- game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

The IMPROPER

On the Town!

Boston's finest restaurants and clubs

JOSE MCINTYRE'S [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Jose McIntyre's is located across from the Aquarium on Milk Street. This is Boston's only Mexican-Irish restaurant and bar. For close to two decades Jose's has been an institution with the after work and late night party crowds. If the Dos Equis man is the world's most interesting man, Jose McIntyre is the world's most entertaining. Come experience the most unique venue in Boston. With 5 rooms, 3 bars, 2 floors and a game room; José is the perfect place to unwind with co-workers or host a celebration.

BARS & CLUBS

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 Dartmouth Street, Boston, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

RUNWAY TRAIN

But Who's Counting?

The fashionistas were out in full force when designer Denise Hajjar hosted a runway presentation of her spring/summer 2012 collection to benefit the Big Sister's Association.

Held in the ballroom of The Fairmont Copley Plaza Boston, the show was emceed by broadcasting beauty Susan Wornick, and it attracted the likes of brunette it-boy Chase Pennington, the flawless Debbie DeMasi, mega-philanthropist Don Rodman, the incomparable Carolyn Mugar, the vivacious Smitty Pignatelli, power babe Jacqui Budd, banking bigwig Diane Goodwin, and photographer-to-the-stars Kerry Brett, who signed copies of her book on inspirational women.

During the festivities, artist Judy St. Peter stood at one end of the catwalk painting a portrait of Lady Gaga to be auctioned off, and viewing the fashion show was like watching a garden bloom.

"I love your jacket!"

"Thanks. It was $17 at Wal-Mart."

However, the funniest remark was when First Lady of Copley Plaza Peggy Dray mentioned that she and her husband had been married for 54 years.

Wornick's response: "All four of my marriages wouldn't add up to that."

Bookworms 'R' Us

For many people, being obliged to wear black tie on a Sunday evening falls into the category of odious, but the most forgivable excuse is Literary Lights—a thoroughly delightful and edifying evening held by the Associates of the Boston Public Library at the Boston Park Plaza.

To begin, they gather a gaggle of local authors to honor. Then there's the ballroom, which is decorated with books to steal at the end of the night. Finally, there's the guest list, which included the likes of Beacon Hillbillies Biddy and Bob Owens with their trio of bodacious offspring, the dashingly handsome

AJ Williams and Kristen Daly at the Denise Hajjar runway presentation

Bill Martin and Laura Spiro at the Literary Lights party

Nathan Fletcher and Marcella Sacco at the Revere Hotel opening

Hunter Ohanian at the Revere Hotel opening

Bryan Barbieri, Simon Mais and Bianca de la Garza at the Revere Hotel opening

Charley "Curly" Aldrich, best-seller factory Bill Martin and the lovely Chris, the simply scrumptious Gina Wickwire, statuesque blonde Vivian Spiro and the wildly lucky Lionel, and boatloads of other people who deserve thanks for preserving one of Boston's greatest treasures.

The keynote speech by the hunky yet brilliant Andre Dubus III was worth the price of admission, and the fact that the following day was a holiday allowed a few guests to down a cocktail or two before dinner, enjoy the surprisingly good wine, and then go out for a nightcap or three afterward.

The evening's most entertaining remark: Bemoaning the general dumbing-down of society, one guest said, "Someone actually believed me when I said that Sodom and Gomorrah were a married couple."

Make It Work

Apparently, fashion shows aren't exciting enough anymore. For the grand opening of the Revere Hotel (cleverly held on the anniversary of the great patriot's historic ride), the models walked down the side of the building, to the general amazement of the crowd on the sixth-floor roof-deck, which included the likes of Boston's answers to Iris Apfel, Doris Yaffe and Marilyn Riseman, radio tycoon Richie Balsbaugh, MassArt grand poobah Hunter Ohanian (the school's fashion students designed the hotel's uniforms), and so on and so forth. There seemed to be a consensus that the hotel was über-hip. However, the reasoning behind the name seemed to escape one local, who said, "Revere? Were Everett, Chelsea and Lynn taken?"

The Improper

Summer Style

Now is the time to shed the heavy prose of winter. Come summer, ornate sentences start to feel woolly and embroidered, too thickly layered for a season when the raw wind whittles down to a whisper, muffling clouds unpeel from the sky, sparrows jitterbug around the Esplanade and groundhogs loll from their mossy holes.

Adam DeTour

Gah. Sorry. Naughty editor! Summer style should be airy. Light. As fresh as a new pair of underpants worn whilst frolicking through a garden sprinkler. It shouldn't go clumping around the page, carbuncled in similes, like the reanimated corpse of Ernest "I Have a Minimalist Writing Style So I Get a Frigging Nobel Prize" Hemingway.

Dammit! Apparently Mr. Prosypants can't put a sock in it. Today's tweet-inflected writing demands brevity. LMFAO #DyingInside. Of course, style is irrelevant if you have no topic. In literary theory, summer is the season that correlates to Romance, in its definition as the archetypal narrative of a hero's quest (not in its definition as the regurgitated Cheez Whiz that is a Jennifer Aniston movie). The standard format for a quest is for a hero to battle monsters in an enchanted forest before finding the Grail. As a salute to literary theory, then, in this issue our editors battle checkout lines and parking enforcement officers as they venture through the city's boutiques and malls to find tasteful summer outfits. Gr8 job IMHO.

CHIP CHAMP

Canto 6 makes the best chocolate chip cookie in Boston. It's a bold statement, but Susanne Young, who co-owns the cozy JP patisserie with her husband, humbly admits that her formula is so popular she can barely keep the bakery case stocked. Her cookies are crisp at the edges, soft in the center, packed with gooey Callebaut chunks and flecked with crunchy sea salt. (Also key: She rests the dough overnight to let the flavors develop.) Even her staff can't get enough, and they've been bugging her to start a cookie-and-milk food truck. Wouldn't that be sweet?

BRAIN GAMES

Draghi enters the Food Network ring.

CHEF CHARLES DRAGHI makes his TV debut next month on Sweet Genius. Adding to the pressure, the Erbaluce owner competes in the dessert-making competition as a nonpastry chef.

Which isn't to say he was unprepared. "I've always done my own desserts, but I'm not really trained," he explains. So when the first casting call rang, Draghi briefly considered referring the producers to "Claude, my French-Canadian cousin, who makes the desserts at night after we all go home." But, as Claude doesn't actually exist and the calls kept coming, Draghi decided to sign up.

He hit the ground running in the first round, which focused on chocolate and offered canary melon as the first surprise mandatory ingredient. Using a variety of spices and incorporating the second surprise ingredient, a hot dog bun, Draghi created a dessert version of a hot dog topped with a sweet melon relish and white chocolate "mustard." It earned a perplexed response from the show's host, master pastry chef Ron Ben-Israel, who declared, "I don't know if this is madness or genius!"

Did Draghi win? He can't tell, although he's quick to say that he enjoyed the 18-hour competition, and Ben-Israel is "a very warm person, despite his android persona." Can't stand the suspense? Catch the show on June 7 to see how it all played out.

AFTER LESS THAN A YEAR in business, the wildly popular Max & Leo's Artisan Pizza is in the process of expanding its Newton Corner location into an adjoining space and adding 30 more seats. Also in the planning stages: dessert pizzas and calzones, and a search for additional locations.

GO WEST French cooking in a casual space

WEST BRIDGE 1 Kendall Square, Cambridge (617-945-0221) westbridgerestaurant.com

First Taste

CHANGE OF COURSE

When West Bridge chef Matthew Gaudet and general manager Alexis Gelburd-Kimler jumped ship from Aquitaine in the South End, they put themselves in a sticky situation. They had to distance themselves from their former employer while serving a similar genre of cuisine. Now that their 3,600-square-foot Kendall Square spot has opened, it's clear the two locales share little more than a French connection.

"I'm using French techniques, but this menu leaves a lot of room for flexibility," says Gaudet. "It's not fussy, it's more about having fun." There's a focus on sharing, with small plates like buffalo sweetbreads and sunchoke-and-pork-shoulder-spiked clam chowder designed to whet your appetite for larger offerings, like toasted faro with peppery upland cress, garbanzo beans, beets and cherries. Larger groups can order whole lamb shoulders or roasted chickens with chanterelles and bacon.

"When we go out, this is how we eat," adds Gelburd-Kimler. "It's casual and fun and about the people you're with as much as what's on your plate." A pair of communal tables, fashioned out of repurposed bowling lanes, provide plenty of space to fork at your friend's duck liver terrine while sipping a cocktail from bar manager Josh Taylor's well-edited list. There's also a 17-seat slate and barn wood bar that offers wines, including Prosecco, on tap.

The name West Bridge harkens back to when the Longfellow was known as the West Boston Bridge. Back then, the location housed the Boston Woven Hose Factory (Gaudet found an old newspaper ad for the factory and reproduced it as a massive poster to hang in the restaurant). More recently, it was a Pompanoosuc Mills furniture store. Gelburd-Kimler and Gaudet have restored the interior to a spacious, industrial blank canvas, which seems a wise choice for two first-time restaurateurs hoping to leave a lasting mark.

"WHEN WE GO OUT, THIS IS HOW WE EAT."

KYLE WRIGHT

Q&A

LADIES' MAN

Best-selling author Justin Halpern reads from and signs I Suck at Girls, the follow-up to his smash *Sh*t My Dad Says*, at Brookline Booksmith on May 29.

Do you have a favorite essay in* I Suck at Girls*?

There's an essay about having casual sex and how it was kind of the exact opposite of what everybody says it's like. When you read men's magazines and you read about getting laid all the time and how to kick your one-night stand out of bed, it's bulls that no one ever really does. I've worked at men's magazines, and those articles are written by people who never get laid. Guys are filled with so much fake bravado.

Were you surprised that Warner Bros. wants to turn this into a TV show?

Yeah, I was. The first show was kind of crappy, so it was a surprise that they were into it. But I'm to blame for the first show's failure. The format was completely wrong. My dad is not an intentionally funny guy, and when he's trying to be funny, he's not. When you get into a multi-camera sitcom format with a live audience, it's just set-up punch lines.

What does your wife have to say about inspiring part of the new book?

I definitely asked her before I started this if it was OK. My rule is if they read anything they don't like, I don't argue with them or question it, I just take it out.

Does that ever get awkward?

There's one story about losing my virginity where I talk about how it was me and one other friend who were the last to do it, and the other friend was like, "Do you really have to put me in there?" I thought about writing a new beginning, but ultimately, he agreed it made the story better.

Are you already planning a follow-up?

After the first book started to do well, HarperCollins was like, "Write *Sh*t My Dad Says: Holidays*," and I didn't really have any holiday stories. I felt if I just wrote some book to try to make money, it'd really smell of that. And then all the people who were nice enough to buy your first book, you've conned them into buying your second, and then they hate you. I have no plans for a third book currently. If something strikes me, and I think it's got enough for a book, I'll look into it.

BOBBY MCGEE

Drink of the Moment

SOUR PATCH

NAME: Cucumber Lavender Sour.

PRICE: $15.

INGREDIENTS: Crop Cucumber Vodka, Domaine de Canton, lemon, lavender bitters, soda water, cucumber garnish.

CREATOR: Russell Williams.

SOUR GRAPES?: "The sour thing's coming back around," says the Bristol Lounge's beverage director Ben Sweeney. "People are cutting back from those really specific cocktails like the Ward Eight and are looking at more basic ones like daiquiris, sours, fizzes and flips."

TASTE: The cucumber sits on the nose, and the first sip is sweet enough to mask any hint of alcohol. Lavender bitters bloom in the aftertaste, while the ginger seems absent, at first. Only after consecutive tastes does the Canton build a kick.

IDEAL FOR: Summer weather, staring out the windows at the sunlit Public Garden, awash in a haze of heated green.

QUAFFABILITY (1-10): 9. In the spirit of lemonade, this cocktail goes down easy. Sadly, you can't buy it from entrepreneurial 10-year-olds.

INSPIRATION: The discovery of lavender bitters. Says Sweeney, "It used to be there was angostura and that was it. But in the last few years, you've seen a huge array of bitters coming on the market." After playing with a gin cucumber sour recipe, he found a subtler partner for the lavender with Crop Vodka.

NOT MARY ANN: "The ginger adds an interesting element." They tried Aperol, at first, envisioning a play on cucumber and rhubarb, but Canton gave the drink a cleaner color and fresher flavor. And made it less reminiscent of a salad. ANDREW RIMAS

SPEED IT UP!

TO T RIDERS WHO BOARD AS IF THEY WERE GOING TO A PICNIC OR MEANDERING THROUGH A MEADOW: You take so much time to get on or off the T, usually because you're texting, that the driver ends up closing the door—on me! This has happened too many times to count. If you want to text or daydream, kindly wait until you're finished before entering or exiting the train. I'm a petite senior, and both I and my shoulders will thank you for it. Move it along

This is for "I Don't Get It" from the May 9 issue:

As a woman and life coach who grew up with four brothers and has vast experience with men (whom I adore), this is what they have taught me on their perspective on women: The second a man spots a female, based strictly on visual appearance, he decides what "role" she could play in his life. Is she easy, someone to date and have fun with, or mother material for his future children (i.e. a girl he can take home to his mother)? This, babe, is a challenge, and men thrive on challenges—something women refuse to accept. I know you think you "connected," and you did, just not the way you think. Something to think about in the future. You sound smart, and I have faith in you. maryhirschpr@yahoo.com

To the vegetarian at table 45:

I got it the first time. Repeatedly asking, "Do you understand that?" or "Does that make sense to you?" made me forget on purpose. I hope you enjoyed the anchovies in your Caesar salad, the beef stock in your risotto and the prosciutto in your chowder as much as I enjoyed your 5 percent tip, and the inspiration to write this. @MeanWaiter

PAST TENSE

My philosophy on massage is "What doesn't kill me makes me calmer." As someone who hunches, tenses and stresses on the regular, I interpret a masseuse's deep-tissue prodding as a painful but necessary "I told you so."

But Denise McGarry, owner of Aloha Boston Massage, the Back Bay studio celebrating its first anniversary on June 1, takes a different tack. She's the city's lone practitioner of Lomi-Lomi, a traditional Hawaiian healing treatment. She discovered the practice three years ago while at a vocational crossroads. "I didn't know whether to continue with massage," she confesses. "But then I found Lomi-Lomi, and it saved my career."

Lomi-Lomi Massage $135
alohabostonmassage.com

A successful massage, of course, demands loosening up on multiple levels. Practiced centuries ago on large stone slabs, Lomi-Lomi is now performed on a sheetless table. The treatment relies on long, flowing strokes, often extending the entire length of the body. In a room set to over 80 degrees, customers are slathered with organic oil while McGarry uses her forearms, hands and elbows in dance-like rhythms to detoxify the body and relax muscles. There's very little applied pressure. Rather, McGarry circles back to spots of tension, coaxing knots to gradually loosen. The process feels more nurturing than punitive, and $135 is worth a ticket to the Aloha state of mind.

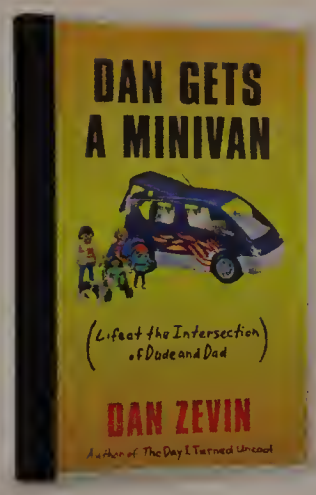
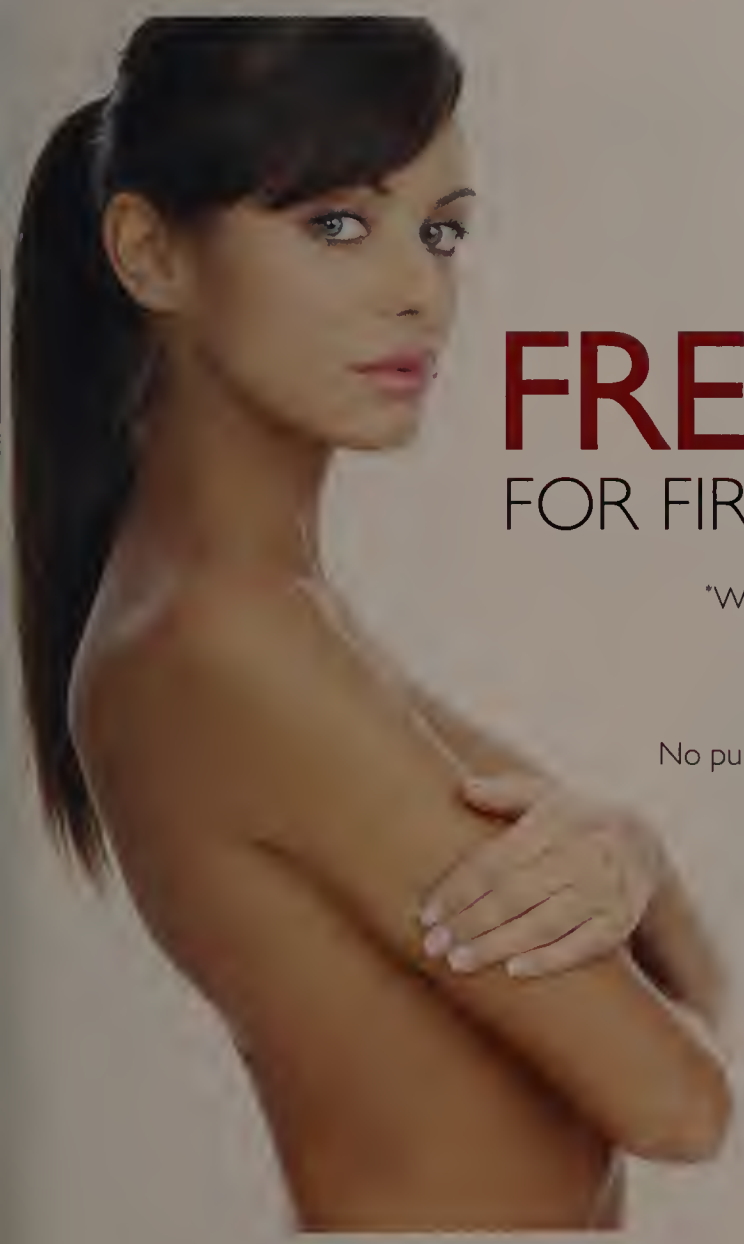
OH, GROW UP



A comedic trawl through hipster parenting

STAY-AT-HOME DAD Zevin roams Brooklyn with his two children acting like their slightly naughty older brother. He's an amused observer and half-outsider claiming he's not so hip. His tales include a take on his mini "life of crime"—his doggy ran briefly off-leash—which brings him to court, where he meets a raffish crew of arrested guys who know the ropes.

Invited to speak at Cardinal MacCauley College graduation, Zevin—though "not the Jewiest Jew on the block"—observes that maybe the school was trying to "think outside the cross."



In interviews for potential nannies, he meets audacious liars who attempt to grab the upper hand, as if they were the ones languidly perusing their employers. There's also entertaining takes on Zevin's broader family, like his father, who's a veritable King of Costco, and his colorful guilt-tripping mother who cultivates an entertaining array of maladies. Learning to play guitar, Zevin's wry grooviness brings him into contact with his near-namesake Dan Zanes, a famous Brooklyn-dwelling kids' musician. This style of absurd fun dances through every page. ✖✖✖

CHILD'S PLAY

A SHORE THING Bonfire time at the Harbor Hotel.

ANYONE WHO'S SPENT more than five minutes with a child knows the importance of a well-timed distraction. A hybrid between MacGyver and a sherpa, the smart parent is equipped with Cheerios, bottles, binkies, stuffed animals and flashing musical doodads. The logistics are on a military scale, so an ideal vacation necessitates an activity-rich destination a short car or ferry ride away with, most importantly, a tolerant native population. With its natural attractions and friendly, laid-back inhabitants, Provincetown fills the bill.

For accommodations far enough away from the main drag for a quiet night's rest, stay at the recently renovated Harbor Hotel. With 119 guestrooms and 10 suites, the stylized mid-century hotel boasts updated furnishings and views of the bay. Suites are ample for toddler exploration and include two flat-screen TVs and two bathrooms. Call ahead to have a Pack 'n' Play crib set up in your room, and make sure to take advantage of the pool, where you can ease your stress at the Cabana Bar while your little ones splash. At night, bundle up next to the bonfire with s'mores and more drinks courtesy of the Whaler Lounge.

✓ Traveler's Checks

Grab one of the complimentary bikes at the Harbor Hotel and follow the trails to Herring Cove Beach to view the sunset among the dunes.

If you're driving, park at the MacMillan Wharf lot early in the morning. For $5, you get free ins and outs all day, thereby avoiding the costly street meters.

Budding marine biologists will want to weigh anchor with Dolphin Fleet Whale Watch. Every voyage doubles as a research trip, with a naturalist onboard collecting data to identify and track sea creatures. Kids will enjoy the interactive discussions, which include plastic sandworms and samples of baleen to make learning tangible. The interior cabin has a cafe serving a full complement of finger foods like hot dogs, pizza and hamburgers (in addition to adult-friendly drinks). There's even free Dramamine if the seas get choppy.

Back on land, you can still partake of the ocean's bounty at the Lobster Pot. Its touristy atmosphere and loud noise level will drown out the most disorderly mini-me. Hot clam chowder and sweet whole lobsters satisfy after a morning on the water, but it's the special Bloody Mary with pepperoncini-infused vodka that gives you back your sea legs. Work off your meal by window shopping along Commercial Street. Grab a coffee at Wired Puppy, use the paintings displayed in the art galleries as a teachable moment about human anatomy, and make your way toward Marine Specialties, a warehouse-sized shop of surplus Army-Navy items. Like a time capsule with price tags, it's filled with such awe-inspiring oddities as 19th-century deep-sea scuba suits, ancient cannons and used gas masks.

TALL TAIL A successful whale watch

Continue your walk to the Pilgrim Monument, where access ramps allow strollers almost to the top of the 252-foot tower for panoramic views of the Pilgrims' actual first landing place (before they journeyed to Plymouth Rock). At the base of the monument, there's a museum where you can gawk at taxidermied animals, like a polar bear and musk ox, brought back from an Arctic expedition and reproductions of the Mayflower's interior.

Before heading back to Boston, make sure to fill up at Fanizzi's by the Sea's Sunday brunch. Besides the requisite eggs and breakfast meats, you'll also find plump local mussels in marinara. Prices are so reasonable that lines can be long, but since parents have to be ambidextrous, they'll have no problem juggling multiple plates. With a view of the harbor (and under the influence of another of Provincetown's so-called famous Bloody Marys), you'll have a necessary moment of complete calm before strapping on your MacGyver gear and tackling the journey back to Boston. ✖✖✖

STRAIGHT SHOOTER

A new contender arrives in Downtown Crossing.

JM Curley
21 Temple Place, Boston
(617-338-5333)
jmcurleyboston.com

LOX OF LOVE House-cured salmon sliders are packed with delicious, unexpected flavors.

NAMED AFTER THE larger-than-life Boston politician with a wobbly moral compass, JM Curley in Downtown Crossing aims to be an institution, a natural choice for a night on the town. Booths, brick walls and a concrete bar set the tone for a stripped-down, no-nonsense experience.

In the same vein as Franklin Café and the Gallows, JM Curley is a place you're more likely to find in the South End than tucked away on a side street adjoining Boston Common. The food hits the sweet spot between comfort and creativity, what chef Sam Monsour describes as "our take on nostalgia." On the blackboard you'll find "Sammy's Seven," Monsour's riffs on familiar fare like popcorn, burgers, PB&J and a catch of the day. (On one visit, nearly each of the seven items had bacon as the common theme.) The regular menu sports standbys like mussels ($10), plump and sweet from simmering in beer, butter and tasso ham, and fried pickles ($5), a basket of deep-fried dill pickle slices ready to be dipped in an omnipresent Russian dressing. A particular standout from the starters was a plate of house-cured salmon sliders ($9), three little hipster tea sandwiches, punched up with red-onion jam and mint-cream cheese.

I had Boston's best rendition of an In-N-Out burger when I ordered the 5-ounce patty ($7.50) at lunch. Glistening with melted cheddar, pickle-inflected Russian dressing and savory grilled onions, it short-circuited my capacity for restraint, as I almost ordered another mid-chew into my last bite. Unfortunately, the magical ratio of meat to dressing to cheese to sweet, grilled bun was out of proportion in the 9-ounce version ($14) at dinner. What was juicy at lunch tasted greasy in its inflated form.

The bar food emphasis translates to a menu heavy on sandwiches, appetizers and snacks, but limited in entrees. The three mains all walked a fine line between fat as a flavor enhancer and detractor, to varying degrees of success. An IPA-marinated hanger steak ($18) was perfectly tender, but its sizable dollop of blue-cheese butter tipped the scales to the overwhelmingly rich. It could've used a starch or a vegetable to counteract the single-dimensional taste. More balanced was the porterhouse pork chop ($16) with sautéed apples serving as a tart-sweet sauce to offset the meat. A side order of marinated mushrooms

EAT THE RICH IPA-marinated hanger steak

($6), a mix of oyster, enoki, beech and cremini, helped balance the heavy meal with acidity. Although the most creative, the most disappointing dish was the fried chicken with five sauces ($20), including orange-soda Buffalo, bacon-beer honey mustard and Doritos cool ranch. The chicken came out tough (Monsour has since changed the recipe) while most of the dipping sauces were unfortunately too literal. Imagine dipping dry, fried chicken into a glass of spicy Sunkist, and you get the picture.

While food is hit or miss, bar manager Kevin Mabry can do no wrong with the cocktail menu. Drinks like the Hemingway Heat ($9) pleasantly challenge the palate with its sweet, tart, spicy combination of rhum agricole, maraschino, grapefruit, lime and jalapeño. Rhubarb in the Seasonal Collins ($9) enlivens the traditional version. And the perfectly muddled Whiskey Smash ($9) rivaled Eastern Standard's. Compared to the subtleties of the cocktails, the fat-drenched bar menu feels leaden.

Milk and cookies

But it's impossible to leave the bar unhappy, especially if you embrace your inner kid and order the milk-and-cookie special. A cast-iron skillet sizzles with a cookie baked to order (chocolate chip on my visit). The humble, nostalgic treat speaks to Monsour's desire to keep the menu small and unfussy. "I'm not trying to be a name-brand chef," he says. "I'm influenced by my dad's mom-and-pop restaurant." JM Curley keeps it fun without being frivolous, a strong contender for long-term incumbent. ✖✖✖

ASK CHERYL

Q: I HAVE A LOT OF SOCIAL EVENTS COMING UP AND I WOULD LIKE TO TRY BOTOX FOR THE FIRST TIME. WHAT'S INVOLVED?

A: Botox™ and Dysport™ (a similar wrinkle reducing agent produced by a competing pharmaceutical company) are wonderful treatments for men and women who want to reduce their frown lines in order to look less stressed or tired. Done properly, it does not look fake or give you a "frozen" look; you simply look more rested (therefore younger!)

The first step is to meet with the physician for a consultation to make sure you are a good candidate and to discuss your expectations. You may have the treatment the same day if you like. The treatment itself just takes a few minutes.

The effects of the treatment will take place gradually over a period of a few days. With any injections there is a possibility of a slight bruise at the injection site, so you should plan to have the treatment at least a week before an event. Since the effects of Botox or Dysport will last at least three months (and in many cases much longer), you can have the treatment done now and you will be good for the season.

Botox is most commonly used to treat the "s", vertical lines between the eyebrows; frown lines on the forehead; and crow's feet, the crinkly lines at the side of our eyes, but can be used elsewhere as well.

OVERRULED

For Sacha Baron Cohen, it's time for a change.

The Dictator ★½☆☆

Starring Sacha Baron Cohen, Ben Kingsley, Anna Faris, Jason Mantzoukas, John C. Reilly and Fred Melamed. Written by Sacha Baron Cohen, Alec Berg, David Mandel and Jeff Schaffer. Directed by Larry Charles. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

FOR STARTERS, EVEN THE beard looks phony.

Sacha Baron Cohen, the spindly comic genius behind Borat and Da Ali G Show, has a way of bringing characters to life. Part of the brilliance of Borat is Baron Cohen's unwavering commitment to his Kazakh journalist. Apparently he lived so long inside that role and its accompanying cheap suit that some bystanders still talk about how bad he smelled. Baron Cohen's milieu is guerrilla theater, as he springs his racist, monstrous caricatures on unsuspecting subjects, gradually coaxing out the worst in people for our shock, awe and amusement.

You won't find any of that in The Dictator, a safe, scripted folly and the first strictly narrative picture Baron Cohen's attempted since 2002's woebegone Ali G Indahouse, which was so lousy it never quite secured an American release. I understand the massive popularity of Borat precluded more stunts pulled on passersby, with 2009's Brüno offering ample evidence that a magician can only pull so many rabbits from his hat. Still, this is dire material that feels more like one of those lost Saturday Night Live movies from the early '90s than the work of our sharpest contemporary satirist.

Baron Cohen, who also cowrote the screenplay, stars as General Admiral Aladeen, the thickheaded despot of a fictional, oil-rich North African country named Wadiya. A pampered ruler with a penchant for ordering executions whenever he's not busy paying for sex with American celebrities, Aladeen is an ignorant, petulant child. Suffering from the egomania typical of a tinhorn despot, he's fixed both Wadiya's Olympics and Golden Globes to ensure he always comes out a winner.

So far, so funny. An opening title card dedicates the movie "in loving memory of Kim Jong Il," and The Dictator initially mines a familiar brand of comedic discomfort, with Baron Cohen's usual jaw-dropping, anything goes one-liners pushing the provocation into transgressive territory. But then the stupid plot kicks in. On a trip to New York City, where he plans to tell off the United Nations, Aladeen is kidnapped and tortured, losing his enormous (fake-looking) beard in the process. Replaced with a body double by his nefarious second-in-command (Ben Kingsley, providing nothing with a role that offers even less), Aladeen finds himself broke and adrift in lower Manhattan.

So of course he winds up working at a vegan co-op run by Anna Faris' wide-eyed, hirsute hippie. A sterling scene-stealer in too many terrible movies, Faris is given little to do here besides smack her forehead in frustration at Aladeen's ignorance. Their interactions are awful, to say nothing of the eventual forced love story that's shoved down our throats. Turns out this dictator just wants to be cuddled?

After teaming up with a nuclear scientist (Jason Mantzoukas) he once ordered executed because the warhead "wasn't pointy enough," Baron Cohen's low-rent despot dives into every tired fish-out-of-water scenario you'd expect to see in a Mike Myers movie. Director Larry Charles' flat, sitcom staging is enough to make one long for The Love Guru.

Baron Cohen's brand of humor is so pushy and unpleasant it clangs against The Dictator's wan setups and hackwork scenarios. A Wadiyan chorus singing "Everybody Hurts" or "Let's Get It On" in a made-up language doesn't distract from the fact that the movie is lazy enough to use those songs as punch lines. As if aching to top Borat's legendary naked fistfight, Baron Cohen lays on the gross-outs, accidentally pooping on somebody's head and filming an entire sequence with the POV inside a woman's vagina. These are desperate moves, and what's worse is that none of them are particularly funny.

The occasional shocking one-liner reminds you that we're in the presence of a genius, but Aladeen's simply not enough of a character to sustain these slender 80 minutes. Starting with that imitation beard, he's Baron Cohen's least fleshed-out creation, existing purely as a vehicle for crude zingers and weak setups. A jarringly insightful late-movie monologue calling out the U.S. for being similar to certain dictatorships is buried beneath the cumbersome love story and other subplot blather.

The thrill of Da Ali G Show or Borat was watching Baron Cohen insinuate his outrageous caricatures into deadly serious surroundings. The Dictator has no such nerve, existing in an alternate cartoon reality where his satire doesn't sting. ✖✖✖

Music { PAUL ROBICHEAU }

ONLY HAPPY

Garbage rekindles its moody alt-rock on new terms.

Garbage plays at Paradise Rock Club on May 26.

"I'VE FINALLY ALLOWED myself to say 'I'm good at what I do,'" Garbage frontwoman Shirley Manson says. "I'm tired and done making excuses and filling myself with self-doubt."

As the smart, stylish singer for one of the most distinctive bands of the '90s, Manson is actually much better than good. Garbage sold 12 million albums behind such hits as "Only Happy When It Rains," "Stupid Girl" and "I Think I'm Paranoid" before going on hiatus in 2005.

Yet the fiery-haired Scottish siren, who overcame depression and self-abuse during her youth with help from music, faced frustrations near the end of the group's 10-year run. "We just got a little burned out from constantly touring and recording and touring again," Manson says. "We needed a break. So ultimately we took one—and it ended up being a lot longer than any of us ever imagined it would."

During that time, she tried to record a quieter solo album, but it didn't fly with label executives. "I ran into the same brick wall that Garbage was running into, which was they wanted us to make pop music, and I rebelled," Manson says. She stopped making music and shifted to acting, playing an android on the TV series Terminator: The Sarah Connor Chronicles. "Then I started to miss my band and ache for them and wanted to make loud music again."

> "We got ourselves into a beginner's mindset. We came from a pure place, and there was a lot of energy poured into this record."

So she did. Now Garbage is back in action, complete with drummer Butch Vig and guitarists Duke Erikson and Steve Marker. They've got a new self-released album, Not Your Kind of People, and a tour that includes a sold-out show at Paradise Rock Club on May 26.

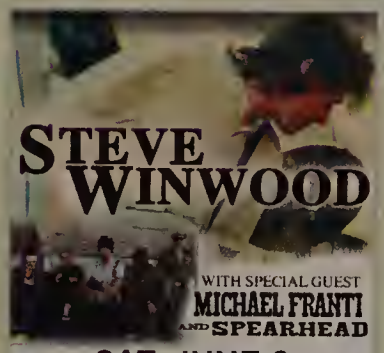
"We really didn't imagine there'd be much interest," Manson, 45, says from Los Angeles. "Seven years is a lifetime on the music scene, so we were completely unprepared and taken off guard."

It should come as no shock that Garbage fans seized the nostalgic opportunity to catch the group in a small club. On the other hand, Not Your Kind of People proves a surprisingly potent addition to Garbage's catalog.

The album features vintage Garbage hallmarks like the dense, blunt chords that blur guitars and synthesizers on the tracks "Blood for Poppies" and "Battle in Me." Yet there's a diversity that shows the band is still pushing the sonic envelope, and Manson hovers between the dark and playful with alluring vocals. "Big Bright World" and "Felt" suggest an intersection between Blondie and Nirvana (Vig produced Nirvana's 1991 earthshaking Nevermind in addition to recent blockbusters for Foo Fighters and Green Day). The cynical "I Hate Love" stirs an electro-disco beat, and "Control" distorts the bluesy bluster of Led Zeppelin's "When the Levee Breaks" through a high-tech haze.

"When we came together this time around, we were like, 'Who cares what people expect us to do sonically? Let's forget all that and go back to trying to make a sound that we believe in,'" Manson says. In a sense, Not Your Kind of People may recall the fresh verve of Garbage's eponymous 1995 debut. "We got ourselves into a beginner's mindset," she says. "We came from a really pure place, and there was a lot of energy poured into this record."

That energy particularly surges through the bracing, riff-driven "Man on a Wire," where Manson sings, "I sat myself down and shot my fear in the face"—a fitting lyric for a comeback album.



"In life, there are a lot of things that we stop ourselves from doing because we're scared of failing," says Manson, who settled in L.A. with husband and longtime Garbage engineer Billy Bush. "Having taken seven years off and disconnecting from the band and my career, from touring and media attention, I came to realize that I didn't need any of those things to have a happy, fulfilled life. Instead of being essential, they were augmentations to a happy life." ×××

TYPE CHANGE

Publishing isn't what it used to be.

WE'RE IN THE MIDST of many revolutions—most of them Internet related—whether it's the Arab Spring or the changing of our personal routines by social networks. Many Improper readers have expressed to me their desire to write books, and technology has also reshaped publishing in the last five years, perhaps more than any other business.

When my first project was published in the 1960s, publishing was buttoned up on the outside, but full of libidinous, drunken, brilliant characters, much like Mad Men, except they produced books, not ads. The only women in publishing then were secretaries, no matter how brilliant or talented. Men ruled the roost, as editors, salespeople and executives. Women were pitifully underpaid and underappreciated. Today, many of the top CEOs, editors and agents are smart, tough-minded women.

Publicity or heavy marketing was almost embarrassing to publishers until the 1970s. The man in charge of spreading the word at my first publisher had hands that shook so much he'd thrust them into his pockets to control them. Part of the shakes came from his lunchtime consumption of booze; sometimes three martinis, followed by vino. As a young author intimidated by the process, I secretly thought, "This guy couldn't sell a Bible to his mother. I'm doomed." Publishing was full of drunks, but they cared more about books than the bottom line. They'd publish promising young people, nurturing them. And they'd carry good niche novelists with small sales and wonderful reviews. It was full of human, loving professionals—squirrelly, demented characters right out of Dickens or Trollope. My first publisher even gave authors gorgeous leather-bound copies of their own book for Christmas presents. Now you're lucky to get a phone call on publication day.

The only thing that hasn't changed is the state of the writers themselves. They still bitch and moan about the publishing houses, agents, editors, publicity departments and how they feel neglected, alone, poor and frustrated. These attitudes, in my opinion, haven't changed since the days of monks working on illuminated manuscripts. This is mostly because writing, like almost all creative pursuits, is a solitary practice. Not lonely, because for many writers the process is a joy. I know to me it is. I lose myself in writing, and a secret person seems to take over. It's therapy as good as yoga or tai chi, or the first time she says, "I love you."

My first agent was a formidable Englishwoman, famous for her stable of writers that included Graham Greene, Jean Giraudoux, John Van Druten and the Goldman brothers, who separately wrote, among other hits, The Lion in Winter and Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid. She'd rest her feet on an embroidered footstool and take a small silver flask from her desk drawer, from which she would take occasional sips of gin. After my first novel had been turned down by five publishers, she told me, "This will be in print. But it'll be easier for you to write a second book than to rewrite the first. I'd also suggest getting a little perspective on your somewhat sheltered life." She took a little sip. "And arrange yourself on a tramp steamer going around the world. They always have a few small cabins. Give you grist for your mill." I never took that tramp steamer, but the characters who have paraded through my investment offices over the years are as strange, exotic and unusual as any assemblage ever collected in the ports and bazaars of the world. My office has been my tramp steamer.

You don't have to go to Chicago or Dallas or Atlanta anymore for interviews. So much of book promotion is with bloggers who have large niche audiences. Recently, I had a conversation for 45 minutes with a delightful woman who had a 100,000 person following. She told me, "You're the first man I've interviewed in a year and a half."

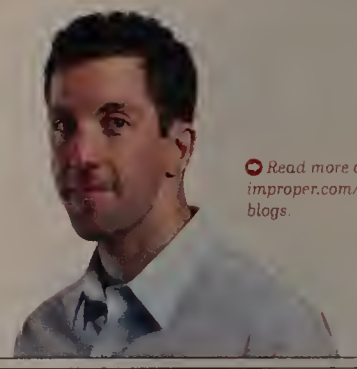
"Why me?" I asked.

"You write as if you understand women," she said. I wish it were true.

I heard a story last week about a sports blogger who has over 2 million followers. If I were him, I'd ask all of them to send me a buck a month, for all those pearls of sports wisdom. This is one of the great times in history to get rich in so many unconventional ways.

Here's one idea to target an audience: My three children are all on Facebook. My guess is that each of them has at least two hundred friends with whom they interact on a regular basis. If my kids plug my new book to their network, some of them will buy it and tell their friends. Who knows how far it can go in the hopes that a book, or any product, can go viral?

The new, virtual tour includes Skype interviews with TV stations. I did one last week with a show in Chicago. This way, the publisher saves on airfare, cabs and hotels. But real anecdotes in strange cities are a lot more interesting than Skype. The first time I went to Chicago on a book tour, I came back to my hotel around midnight. On the elevator were two ladies. On the ride up, one of them looked at me and said, "How'd you like some lipstick on your dipstick?" I declined.



Anecdotes are material, but relationships are everything. This is almost my first rule of life. You could be Tolstoy today and not find a publisher. Search your past for anyone who entered this field in any capacity—newspapers, magazines, corporate communications, books. Anyone who shared a piece of childhood with you will respond. Believe in yourself. But more important: Keep putting it out there. Writers write. Be persistent. Read the Paris Review series of interviews with many of the last century's greatest writers. You'll learn that you're not alone in frustration. Lose yourself in the writing. And don't punish the booze. ×××

WHIP IT GOOD

On the flaws and merits of Fifty Shades of Grey

Read more at improper.com/blogs.

I NEVER THOUGHT IT COULD happen to me, but there I was, deep inside a world of lust, sadism and painful cliché. Oh, man. Oh, baby. I was so aroused sexually.

Written without the skill one could expect to find in the Penthouse Forum comes Fifty Shades of Grey, the summer's hottest beach read and a title some may want to tackle with a towel around their waist. The author is E.L. James, a former London TV executive who explains in her bio that she fantasized about writing stories "but put those dreams on hold to focus on her family and career." While Virginia Woolf made do with a room of her own, James waited until she was unshackled from her job and children to write Twilight fan fiction on the Internet. Through word of mouth, her series about a dom/sub relationship was published, skyrocketed in popularity, and now Fifty Shades of Grey is the No. 1 book on Amazon, and James' trilogy holds the top three spots on The New York Times print and e-book best-seller list. They're essentially romance novels, but having gripped the national stage so tightly, a new term has been coined: "Mommy Porn," the most unsettling new genre since acid jazz.

As you can tell, I'm not a fan, but what turned me off weren't the blunt attempts to excite me as a repressive but the repeated blows I received as a reader.

The story stars two cardboard cutouts named Anastasia Steele and Christian Grey. When we first meet Anastasia, she's a clumsy, kindly virgin. By the end of the book, she's the same person, except now into bondage. On almost every page, there's an appearance by at least one of her four nervous tics, which include biting her lip, staring at her fingers and blushing. By page 80, I'd counted all her favorite shades. She flushed crimson, scarlet, beet. I found a puce in there somewhere. Also, when shocked or aroused, Anastasia's heart leaps into her mouth. This happens so repetitively, it's as if beating is the organ's secondary responsibility. Christian, on the other hand, is confident, handsome and a self-made millionaire at 27, so right away you're rooting for the guy.

I'm aware I'm not the target audience, but I'm still amazed at how Fifty Shades of Grey has worked many of the fairer sex into a frenzy. Christian is a damaged bad boy who can be redeemed through a woman's love. I see that stereotypical carrot at the end of the flogging cane. But Anastasia seems an insulting proxy. Not because of her sexual submission, as some critics have claimed, but because of James' characterization. Anastasia isn't an ingenue, she's an idiot.

While I don't hesitate to call Fifty Shades of Grey moronic, I cannot call it brainless.

Once, in a postcoital haze, Anastasia notices that Christian—the orphaned son of a crack addict, a man who hates to be touched, feels undeserving of love and furnishes an entire room in his penthouse with whips and chains—has some dots of scar tissue on his torso. Her first instinct? Must be measles. Only later, at a dinner party where Christian's adoptive mother excuses herself to take a call concerning a local measles outbreak, does Anastasia learn that Christian has had all his vaccinations, and perhaps the man who presented her with a sex contract—which included an addendum on fisting—is scarred with, gasp, cigarette burns.

While I don't hesitate to call Fifty Shades of Grey moronic, I cannot call it brainless. I know educated professionals who discuss the book at work. A teacher friend told me he can't enter the staff lounge without hearing about Anastasia's sexual adventures. (He also said the teachers' husbands are encouraging the habit, as "I think it's getting them going in bed.") These are intelligent people engaging with a vapid novel, but it's toward a valuable social end.

I spoke with a 30-year-old woman who works with my father. In their office, more than a dozen other ladies were reading Fifty Shades of Grey, but she initially declined to join them, explaining, "I get bored easily." Now she's torn through the entire trilogy in less than three weeks. What finally lured her? "The erotic part, obviously." But what she enjoyed most was following how Christian changed over the course of the series. Initially drawn by titillation, she found the evolution more enticing. And what was the last book she read before Fifty Shades of Grey? "I couldn't even tell you."

That's all I need to hear.

I don't care if it's a story about a boy wizard, Swedish rapists, teens shooting each other with flaming arrows, or the erotic exploits of a woman whose mental acuity has been beaten, ball-gagged and locked in a pet cage, if it gets a book in the hands of a non-reader, I'm an unabashed supporter. Junk food is empty calories, but it keeps the system running. Do I think most fans of Fifty Shades of Grey will turn to Madame Bovary? No. But they got a taste of something new, and they liked it. ✖✖✖

DON'T GO THERE!

Learning a brave, new style of magazine snark at Us Weekly

CELEBRITIES OF THE WORLD, listen up. You knew this day would come eventually, and here it is. If you venture out in public wearing any piece of clothing that's even mildly eccentric, you may be upbraided via a wickedly cutting pun, available for perusal at supermarket checkout lines nationwide. Fear and detest me, ye famous ones, for I'm now a Top Cop with the Us Weekly Fashion Police.

How did I, a man who devotes an entire dresser drawer to sweatpants, attain a position wherein I judge the sartorial decisions of others? That's none of your concern. Silence! I'm thinking of something mean to say about your hat.

Us Weekly's May 7 issue featured my Top Cop debut. To land an esteemed spot in any issue, you've got to come up with at least one joke that beats out the submissions of the rest of the force. You don't know pressure, my friend, until you've tried to out-quip Chuck Nice.

For this particular issue, the targets included Dianna Agron, Lake Bell and Angela "Big Ang" Raiola. Don't know who these people are? Then you don't read enough Us Weekly. Also, you're probably a man. Thus you may know important facts such as Justin Verlander's E.R.A. when playing Seattle, yet be unaware that Big Ang is on Mob Wives and owns a bar on Staten Island called the Drunken Monkey. Actually, it's very likely that you don't know this even if you're a woman.

I'll admit that I fail many of Us Weekly's tests of cultural fluency. One headline on the May 7 cover reads "Teresa's Plot Against Melissa." I guess you're supposed to know who Teresa and Melissa are. Was Mother Teresa plotting against Melissa Etheridge? This is why you make an impulse buy at the checkout line—to find out.

Fortunately, you don't have to memorize actresses' IMDB entries to chide their wardrobe decisions, and two of my Fashion Police jokes made it to print. The aforementioned Dianna Agron was photographed wearing a dress emblazoned with a mildly lurid pattern of prize ribbons. I offered, "She's gonna take a ribbin' over this one." That gem was then printed two million times and distributed across America. And that's much more satisfying than merely saying the same thing in the company of my friends, very few of whom demonstrate the proper degree of reverence for a devastating pun. When I told my friend Murph that I made the Top Cop roster, he replied, "Oh no. They're only going to encourage you."

Besides the ribbin' line, I also contributed a headline. A bonus page featured women wearing tomato-patterned dresses. The headline read, "These stars just don't know ripe from wrong." Take that, Kirsten Dunst! You may be rich and beautiful and happy beyond my wildest dreams, but I mocked the apparel that you probably got for free. I'm a little disappointed that they opted not to use, "You say 'tomato,' I say, 'That's an ugly dress.'"

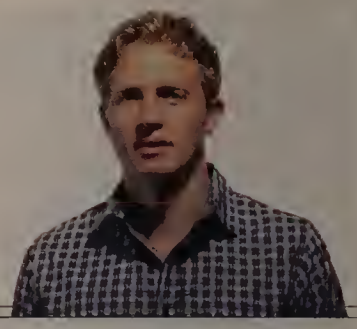
Many more of my submissions ended up on the cutting-room floor. Dree Hemingway was pictured standing among the creatures from Maurice Sendak's Where The Wild Things Are. Given her outfit, I suggested, "Where the Wild Things Barf." No dice.

Kelly Brook wore a sunflower-patterned dress, but perhaps it was a stretch to say that the designer was Vincent van Gogh-Away. Ditto my Magic Eye reference, regarding a lurid reptilian ensemble worn by Perez Hilton: "If you stare long enough, you'll see a cool 3-D picture of a tasteful outfit." However, I stand by the line I wrote about Lake Bell's green Munchkin jacket: "That's a mistake by a Lake." Pithy, concise and edgy in its offensiveness to the city of Cleveland, it's everything you look for in a Top Cop fashion takedown.

I've since participated in another round of Fashion Policing, but I'm not sure if I made the roster. That's OK, because I'm still getting the hang of this. Us Weekly, for all its impulse-buy, beach-bag lack of pretension, strives for snide brevity in its captions. There's a right way and a wrong way to approach this challenge. When presented with a photo of a woman in a garish pink gown, you don't want to go into a 50-word explication of matriarchal cultural constructs as they apply to gender and the color spectrum. What you want to do is write, "Pepto-Dismal."



If I keep at this, I'm sure that eventually I'll learn who Teresa is and how to spell "Gwyneth" without looking it up. So consider yourself warned, celebrities. They say that those in glass houses shouldn't cast stones, but they never said that those in Old Navy T-shirts shouldn't make fun of Vanessa Hudgens' awful hippie outfit. What is this, the age of Yuck-quarius? ×××

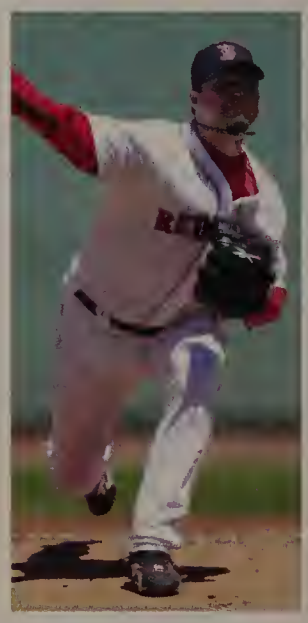
ON THE KID, THE KID AND LARRY LEGEND



5 ON THE SOX SPRING

Keep the Kid Rumor has it—and by now, this may have already happened—that when Kevin Youkilis is healthy, the Sox will hand him back the third base job and send Will Middlebrooks down to Pawtucket. First, let me say that I understand the reasoning. But I don't agree. Youk hasn't been Youk for two years, and the future is now for Middlebrooks—Boston's best third base prospect since… well, Kevin Youkilis. (Apologies to Wilton Veras.)

The K Man Haven't heard much bitching on the closer front recently, eh? That's because Crazy Alfredo Aceves hasn't been half bad. It's funny, because one of the biggest knocks on AA was that he couldn't strike anyone out, but at press time he leads all AL closers with 20 Ks. (He also leads the entire league in "terrifying thoughts.")

Don't Look Now But despite Aceves' success, Andrew Bailey's progressing nicely after thumb surgery and should be ready to join the club around the All-Star break. This not only helps keep things stable in the ninth, but allows Aceves to rejoin the relievers in the bullpen and bolster the entire staff. It should be fun. At least for a week, until Bailey gets hurt again. Vegas has "sore elbow" listed as the early favorite.

Shape Up or Ship Out We've all had a good time joking about Josh Beckett's weight, golf game and fake-tough-guy attitude, but enough is enough. If Beckett can't be an ace it's time to throw him overboard. That's not to say he can't turn it around, and Seattle was a good start. But let's see him do it against a Major League team before we get too excited.

Leading Off Until Jacoby Ellsbury returns (hopefully by the end of June), the Sox will scramble to find a consistent leadoff hitter. Mike Aviles filled the void for a while, Ryan Sweeney's seen some reps and even Daniel Nava may find his way into the mix, but no one will remotely scratch the surface of what Ellsbury does for the lineup. (Unless they want to reactivate Johnny Pesky, but I'm starting to think that may never happen.)

2 MONEY MATTERS

WELKER SIGNS
People say that by signing his franchise tender, Wes Welker pissed away his biggest piece of leverage toward earning a long-term deal. That's incorrect. Welker's best leverage is his BFF, aka the fancy-haired Mr. Bündchen. He'll get the extension, because Brady wants him to. End of story.

THE BIG SHILL
Tough times for Curt Schilling, whose video game company, 38 Studios, is down millions and on the verge of going belly-up. Personally, I don't know what the problem is. Just throw some sutures on it, and everything should be fine.

4 DATES TO WATCH

5/23: A would-be Game 6 between the Celtics and the Sixers in Philadelphia—formerly the City of Brotherly Love, now the City of Drunken Spite.

5/25: The Sox start a stretch of seven games against the Rays and Tigers. In other words: Better send out the Shaughnessy signal. It's going to get ugly.

5/27: It's the first weekend of the French Open. Or as they say in France: "Pah! You Americans are revolting!"

6/4: Thirty teams. Forty rounds. No one you've ever heard of. It's the MLB Draft! (And it's a slow two weeks for sports.)

ON THE BIG 3'S LAST STAND

The Kid Is Back Deadlines prevent me from getting too specific on the Celtics, but nothing can stop me from celebrating Kevin Garnett's resurgence. His performance during these playoffs has been nothing short of legendary, and will hopefully serve as an inspiration to 7-foot, 36-year-old mega-millionaires everywhere. It's never too late, fellas.

Injuries, Injuries and More Injuries The Celtics have a ton. Paul Pierce's knee, Ray Allen's ankle, Avery Bradley's shoulder, Mickael Pietrus' confidence, Brandon Bass' jump shot. The list goes on. But it's not an excuse. You want real injuries? The Magic lost Dwight Howard; the Bulls lost Derrick Rose. Nothing the C's have faced can hold a candle to those disasters. Not even the loss of Jermaine O'Neal.

It's All About Rondo KG carried the Celtics early, but the fate of this team still rests on the pointy shoulders of Rajon Rondo. When he's at his best, the C's can hang with anyone. If he's anything less, they'll go home early—off to a summer filled with retirement reports, trade rumors and the inevitable Greg Stiemsma sex tape.

ONE BONA FIDE LEGEND
Shout-out to Larry Bird, who recently became the first person to win the NBA MVP, Coach of the Year and Executive of the Year. Unbelievable. And a shame he couldn't have accomplished all three with the C's. Just another reason to hate Rick Pitino. (Not that you need one.)

HARPOON BREWERY

"I think you can fall in love in front of millions of people."

Soroff On ALI FEDOTOWSKY

The former Bachelorette talks about bowling, bad pickup lines and very publicly falling in love.

REALITY-TV STAR ALI FEDOTOWSKY, 27, grew up in Williamstown and graduated Phi Beta Kappa from Clark University. She moved to Northern California and worked in ad sales at Facebook before joining season 14 of The Bachelor. Faced with a choice between her job and the show, she returned to her career, but ABC pursued her and she became the star of the highly-rated season six of The Bachelorette. Her relationship with Roberto Martinez, to whom she became engaged on the show's finale, ended while she was working as a correspondent for the Fox TV affiliate in San Diego. She's now the host of 1st Look, which airs in Boston on NECN. She lives in Los Angeles.

Jonathan Soroff: Is it strange to be famous just for dating?
Ali Fedotowksy: God, yes. First of all, I feel a little thrown off by the whole fame thing, but I wouldn't say I'm known only for dating. Yes, I searched for love on TV, but I'm more like a normal girl.

So what part of having a camera in your face 24/7 seemed like a good idea?
[Laughs.] I didn't honestly think it through, and I didn't know what was involved. When I originally went on The Bachelor, I was sure I'd be thrown off the first night. The first girl I met was a model, super gorgeous. And no one goes on one of those shows thinking they'll find love; it just seems like an interesting experience and maybe a fun time. When I did The Bachelorette, I saw it as an opportunity to just go for it.

Most realistic thing about reality TV?
It's hard to say. When I cried, it was for real, but a lot of people said, "She's such a bad actress." So I guess the emotions. But any show with eliminations involved, they have producers with a hand in it, and there's a lot of editing. They try to get you to do things.

Like what?
For instance, on my season on The Bachelorette, you're supposed to bring two guys to the end, and both are supposed to propose to you because that's a more dramatic ending. I just said, "No way." I let one of the guys go early.

So can you really have a romance with the whole world watching?
I think so. It depends on who you are. Some people are extremely private and some aren't. I happen to be super open with my life. I was always that girl who you hang out with one weekend, and Monday morning there are 5,000 photos tagged on Facebook. So yes, I think you can fall in love in front of millions of people. You can fall in love anywhere if it's actual love.

Was it weird that people got mad at you when you and Roberto broke it off?
Yes. Honestly, I think I let it get to me a little more than I should have. There was a point where people were writing me e-mails, and I was writing back, trying to justify myself. I finally thought, "What am I doing? I don't owe anyone an explanation as to why it didn't work out."

Would you do it all again?
Yes. No question. I had an awesome relationship with a great person, and it was a huge part of my life. I learned a lot.

Is Roberto well-endowed?
[Laughs.] That's definitely something I'm going to keep to myself.

Biggest lesson learned?
At the end of the day, the only person you can rely on is you. I think I learned to be strong.

Ideal date?
You're going to think I'm super cheesy, but something like bowling. I haven't been on a date since I became single six months ago, and dating scares me. I don't want to get coffee or have dinner with someone. What if the conversation was awkward? I'd rather do something fun, and I happen to really like bowling.

Three things you want in a mate?
He's gotta be funny, and I don't mean goofy funny. That I can definitely do without. He's got to be witty. And that has to do with another one, which is smart. He needs to be educated, or on the same level as me intellectually. And the third thing is probably respectful of his mother. I have a theory that guys who respect their moms respect their women.

Did Mark Zuckerberg ever ask you out?
[Laughs.] No! I know Zuck, and I know his girlfriend, and they've been together a long time. They're a great couple.

Worst pickup line you ever heard?
I guess that stupid line about, "Did it hurt? Falling from Heaven?"

Biggest turnoff?
Arrogance.

Celebrity crush?
Leonardo DiCaprio is my all-time, but he's probably everyone's. So I'll go with Andy Samberg. I'm a big Andy Samberg fan.

Biggest mistake most guys make in trying to woo a woman?
Trying too hard. Flashing how important they are or how much money they have.

Favorite segment you've done for 1st Look?
A Vespa tour of Miami, because we went to a place called Wynwood, where they have all these amazing street artists and murals. It's like a huge outdoor museum, and I ate one of the best things I've ever tasted, which was a $6 sandwich from a food truck.

Didn't you enter a noodle-eating competition on one episode?
I did a food challenge, where two other girls and I had to eat four pounds of noodles each. I was serious about this. And the girl who won was this little tiny thing. I gave it my all, and then I went into the bathroom and puked.

Best reasons to watch your show?
If you're a guy, we spend lots of time in places like Miami, and there are lots of bikinis. We're also doing things like the best steakhouses. And the show will give people a lot of really good ideas for dates. ✖✖✖

OUR PREVIEW OF THE 2012
SUMMER CONCERT SEASON
BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

SOME CONCERTS, like some unseasonal weeks in June, are hotter than others. Already this year, certain tours have jumped to stadiums, and the Newport Folk Festival has already sold out. But a glimpse across the region's spectrum of open-air offerings suggests that it's not all about popularity and scale. Intimate spaces like the Museum of Fine Arts' Calderwood Courtyard, Lowell's Boarding House Park, Cape Cod Melody Tent, South Shore Music Circus and Indian Ranch sport well-balanced schedules that span country, rock and world music. Diana Krall, Ziggy Marley, Joe Walsh, k.d. lang and a Seal/Macy Gray pairing even perform at more than one of those venues. Here are my top 10 picks for summer shows.

RADIOHEAD, MAY 29, COMCAST CENTER. These art-rock modernists march to a different drummer—and added a second for their first tour in four years. Over the course of 25 years, the English band has evolved from post-punk guitars to electronic experimentation with a taste for oblique, minimalist textures topped by Thom Yorke's haunting voice. And they kill it live, shuffling set lists with old and new songs to stay fresh.

NEWPORT FOLK FESTIVAL, JULY 27–29, FORT ADAMS STATE PARK, R.I. The region's premier summer event only gets bigger and better with My Morning Jacket, Patty Griffin, Jackson Browne, Alabama Shakes, the Head and the Heart, Punch Brothers, Sharon Van Etten and Tune-Yards among the artists pushing boundaries on its three stages. Plus there's a separate Friday night bill with Wilco.

NEWPORT JAZZ FESTIVAL, AUG. 4–5 FORT ADAMS STATE PARK, R.I. If you can't get tickets to Newport Folk, its senior cousin could prove just as mind-blowing with its collaborative combinations. The first day alone includes the Pat Metheny Band, Jack DeJohnette, Joe Lovano/Dave Douglas' Sound Prints, Dianne Reeves, James Carter, Bill Frisell and the Bad Plus. The second day includes Jason Moran, Ambrose Akinmusire, the Maria Schneider Orchestra and a concert-length set by Susan Tedeschi and Derek Trucks' band.

ROGER WATERS, JULY 1, FENWAY PARK. Could there be a more fitting place to see the Pink Floyd mastermind recreate The Wall than in front of the Green Monster? Waters' massive stage matches the stadium setting; he just needs flight paths for the props that'll fly over the crowd. Given Waters' reputation for pristine sound and a band that does justice to the material without other Floyd members (apart from backup guitarist Snowy White), The Wall could become the best aural and visual rock show ever staged at Fenway.

SYSTEM OF A DOWN, AUG. 9, COMCAST CENTER. Much like Soundgarden last summer, this is a hard-rock reunion not to miss. System of a Down returns after its five-year hiatus to tour with fellow metal iconoclasts Deftones. Fronted by singer Serj Tankian and guitarist Daron Malakian, the L.A. quartet turns on a dime with blunt, edge-of-operatic rock and a socio-political commitment that reflects its members' Armenian-American heritage.

GOGOL BORDELLO, JUNE 1, BANK OF AMERICA PAVILION. Kicking off the tent's harborside season, this gypsy-punk outfit from New York remains one of today's most powerful live bands. Ukrainian-born ringmaster Eugene Hütz works the stage (and beyond) like an exuberant madman while his multi-ethnic troupe lends fiddle, accordion and percussion to the theatrical carnival.

FIONA APPLE, JUNE 23, MOUNTAIN PARK, HOLYOKE Here's an outdoor alternative to the mercurial singer's show a week later at Boston's Citi Performing Arts Center Wang Theatre. Tracks from her upcoming album (her first in seven years) prove Apple hasn't lost her idiosyncratic, cabaret touch. But when she hits the stage to exorcise older tune "Fast as You Can" with coiled intensity, she dances the tightrope.

GREEN RIVER FESTIVAL, JULY 14–15. GREENFIELD COMMUNITY COLLEGE. This year, New England's other fests pale next to Newport, but this western oasis echoes Newport in booking the Guthrie Family Reunion and soulman Charles Bradley. Beyond three stages of acts that also include Los Lobos, Richard Thompson, Ozomatli and David Wax Museum, Green River's the only place you can turn to see tethered hot-air balloons rise into the afternoon sky.

BRUCE SPRINGSTEEN, AUG. 14. FENWAY PARK; AUG. 18, GILLETTE STADIUM. Although the move to stadiums isn't ideal, the demand's there, and the Boss' recently announced return to the ballpark sure trumps the football setting. He's been scattering gems like "Trapped," "Racing in the Street" and "Rosalita (Come Out Tonight)" into his shows to balance songs from his new album, Wrecking Ball. And the late Clarence Clemons' nephew Jake has matured on sax as part of the extended E Street Band, which equally evokes Springsteen's Seeger Sessions group. If the Boss can still meet the stadium challenge, his gift for both physical (might he crowd-surf in Foxborough?) and emotional communion with his audience will make these shows must-attend events.

BOSTON ROCK AND SOUL FESTIVAL, JULY 29, ROCK AND BLUES CONCERT CRUISE. You don't have to crawl the clubs by night to catch the cream of the Boston scene. Instead, hop aboard the Provincetown II for an afternoon on the harbor with Dennis Brennan, Jenny Dee & the Deelinquents, Will Dailey, Love in Stockholm, Sea Monsters and fellow local stalwarts. It's a stacked bill that outweighs alternate cruises with the English Beat and John Brown's Body. ×××

ALABAMA SHAKES

ON THE FOLK WAGON

Newport Folk Festival producer Jay Sweet has, in the opinion of some, a dream job. It's also been his dream come true. In four years, the North Shore resident and Paste Magazine editor-at-large has resurrected the iconic festival into an event that artists and fans tout alongside Bonnaroo and Lollapalooza, even though it's one-eighth the size.

JAY SWEET AND GEORGE WEIN

"Newport's an honor," says Sweet, who picked up the booking reins from longtime producer Bob Jones and fabled impresario George Wein, who now mainly oversees the following week's Newport Jazz Festival. "Everyone has said New England deserves its own Bonnaroo or Lollapalooza.... We have something 10 years older than Woodstock, man. Why would you want to create something bigger?"

In 2011, Newport Folk sold out two weeks in advance with acts like the Decemberists, Elvis Costello and Emmylou Harris gracing seaside Fort Adams State Park which holds 10,000 revelers per day. This year sold out more than three months early, and Sweet says half the tickets were bought even before the lineup was announced.

"The last two years have been my perfect playlist," Sweet says. But it's not just about landing marquee names like My Morning Jacket (whose frontman Jim James serves on Newport Folk's board of advisers) and Jackson Browne for 2012's two-day lineup. It's booking Alabama Shakes, Gary Clark Jr. and Of Monsters and Men before they exploded as a draw. "We do pride ourselves on picking good talent, artists who are in it for the long haul," Sweet says. "We believe that once people get turned on to them, it's going to be like wildfire." Dawes and Deer Tick are among the returning bands that Newport helped break.

The festival where Dylan went electric and the Pixies went acoustic now mixes indie-rock buzz bands and trad-folk veterans who often admire one another and sit in on each other's sets, making Sweet's three-stage scheduling "like Tetris."

This year, Newport Folk added a separate Friday-night show with Wilco on Fort Adams' main stage. In addition to an all-star backstage BBQ to benefit the Newport Festivals Foundation, Conor Oberst and Deer Tick are hosting theater and club after-shows.

For the future, Sweet even suggests possibly scheduling across the week between Newport Folk and Jazz, blurring styles along the way. "It might be nice to open with shows and start with the 'folkiest' folk and end with the 'jazziest' jazz and have 10 days of music." He says. "It's a dream."

THERE'S A LOT RIDING ON THIS

PMC 2012

AUGUST 4&5

ARE YOU READY TO COMMIT TO THE PAN-MASS CHALLENGE?

Through the Pan-Mass Challenge, ordinary people commit to achieving extraordinary physical and philanthropic goals. In August, 5,500 men, women and teens from 36 states and 8 countries will commit to riding up to 190 miles and raising $36 million for cancer research. Since 1980, the Pan-Mass Challenge has raised $338 million for Dana-Farber Cancer Institute. Somewhere along the PMC route lies a cure for cancer.

Beast in Show

Belle of the Ball

Like many '90s phenomena, Beauty and the Beast has been catapulted back to relevance thanks to a 3-D reappearance in movie theaters. The glitzy stage adaptation doesn't capitalize on new technology, perhaps because it was so lushly imagined when it first took Broadway by storm in 1994. Now a national tour lands at the Boston Opera House, May 29-June 3, telling a familiar tale that may be, well, as old as time, but that sports a very Disney aesthetic.

Movies Edited by Kyle Wright

Reviews by Sean Burns

American Reunion ★★ Presupposing a level of affection for these characters I suspect is shared by very few, this belated fourth installment (not counting the direct-to-video spin-offs) finds Jason Biggs and Co. settling uncomfortably into their 30s. The entire original cast returns to Michigan for a curiously timed 13th high school reunion, presumably comparing notes on how that whole movie stardom thing never quite worked out. Biggs' Jim complains that parenthood has put a stake through evenings with his formerly horny wife (Alyson Hannigan) while the old gang mopes around making references to earlier films. The lone source of amusement is Seann William Scott's Stifler, still sputtering obscenities, partying hard and wondering aloud how he got stuck with this bunch of prematurely old farts. On the bright side, if this makes enough money, maybe Tom Hanks will finally consider my pitch for a Bachelor Party sequel, which will catch up with all those characters now that they've joined AARP. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Avengers ★★★ It was a rough takeoff. After five movies of buildup, the often crummy (see Thor, Iron Man 2, The Incredible Hulk) but occasionally wonderful (Captain America: The First Avenger) Marvel Films' strategy of building a bridge to nowhere at last pays off with a rock 'em, sock 'em, superhero spectacular, in which Earth's mightiest heroes team up to take on an alien invasion in midtown Manhattan. Playing out like a fanboy's nocturnal emission, we finally get to see what would happen if Iron Man fought Thor. But what makes the picture click is writer/director Joss Whedon's knack for snappy banter, as he supplies killer one-liners to Robert Downey Jr.'s debauched Tony Stark and plays to the fissure between Mark Ruffalo's laid-back line readings and his gigantic green alter ego. Massively scaled, coldly impersonal set-pieces abound, but the character interactions zing. Whedon isn't much of an action director, but he's gifted with an overqualified cast, allowing them to quip away to their hearts' content. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Bernie ★★ Director Richard Linklater adapts the true story of a gay, small-town Texas funeral director (Jack Black) with a penchant for stepping out with elderly widows. Shirley MacLaine hams it up to addled effect as a mean old lady, and Linklater pads out this murder tale with testimonials from actual residents of Carthage, Texas. It's half-documentary, half-feature, meaning that every time Linklater and cowriter Skip Hollandsworth don't feel like writing a scene, they can fall back on eyewitnesses to do the work for them. Kudos to Matthew McConaughey for eschewing his usual shirtless vanity in order to play a self-promoting lawman in rimless glasses and a silly hat. The movie is neither fish nor fowl, rife with easy shortcuts and outsized performances. Black's appeal continues to elude me, but Bernie could've been either a chilling documentary or a terrific character study. As is, it's neither. (At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

The Cabin in the Woods ★★★ We've all seen this flick before, where a few teens shack up in a cottage for a booze- and hormone-fueled weekend that turns predictably horrific. But what you haven't seen is a nutzoid explanation for where these kinds of pictures come from, and Buffy the Vampire Slayer brain-trust Joss Whedon and Drew Goddard have concocted a snarky deconstruction involving angry gods and a couple of stiffs going through the motions in a high-tech scare factory. Character actors Richard Jenkins and Bradley Whitford spin gold out of Whedon's quips, engineering slasher-film tropes during just another day at the office. Younger members of the cast give game and, at times, quite purposefully awful performances, with Thor's Chris Hemsworth the standout for deliberate inelegance. The joke within a joke eventually escalates to giddy levels of carnage and insanity, yet you find yourself suffering from a weirdly hollow feeling when all is said and done. Clever only gets you so far. (In the suburbs.)

Damsels in Distress ★★★ ½ Writer/director Whit Stillman, sadly MIA since 1998's The Last Days of Disco, returns with his brand of uppity, articulate characters and their lack of self-awareness. Indie it-girl Greta Gerwig stars as Violet, the leader of the in-crowd at the fictional Seven Oaks College who's tirelessly devoted to improving the lives of her fellow students, whether or not they need her assistance. Running a suicide prevention center (the "prevention" part of the sign keeps amusingly falling off), Violet believes there's no psychological problem that can't be cured by free donuts, scented soaps and a vigorous regimen of tap dancing. Loopier and more cartoonish than Stillman's previous pictures, Damsels doesn't progress from scene to scene so much as it lurches through the school year, but the ramshackle effect is curiously enchanting. Stillman eyes even the dimmest of these kids with tremendous affection, until Violet's lifelong ambition to "start an international dance craze" becomes weirdly wistful and almost noble. A fine mess. (In the suburbs.)

Dark Shadows ★★★ ½ I'm exhausted by the constant collaborations between Johnny Depp and Tim Burton, which too often find them putting a homogenized stamp of pale makeup and self-conscious quirk on preexisting properties like Charlie and the Chocolate Factory or (heaven help us) Alice in Wonderland. But in adapting this weirdo 1960s serial, these two have hit a sweet spot they've been consistently missing for almost 20 years. Genuinely odd, with a half-kidding tone, the film follows Depp's 16th-century vampire, cursed for all eternity by a spurned lover (the magnificent Eva Green) only to be unearthed in 1972. It's a visual feast, with sumptuous gothic production design occasionally offset by tacky DayGlo colors. Popping with invention and a prankish, kinky sense of humor, the movie's soap-opera plotting dovetails nicely with Burton's career-long inability to tell a coherent story. Luxuriating in bizarre set-pieces and bloody asides, Dark Shadows is an extremely strange film, but it feels personal and particular. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Darling Companion ★ Possibly the most inconsequential movie ever made, director Lawrence Kasdan (who wrote the script with his wife, Meg) expects us to spend two hours worrying about a couple of aholes who can't find their dog. Once upon a time, Kasdan wrote The Empire Strikes Back and Raiders of the Lost Ark, before The Big Chill's fluke success turned him into the tiresome poet laureate of baby boomers. Darling Companion finds Kevin Kline and Diane Keaton giving uncharacteristically grating performances as wealthy folks who can't find the pooch after their daughter's wedding at a vacation estate in the mountains. Cinematographer Michael McDonough should hide his head in shame, as the light sources constantly

As You Wish

A Grand Reunion For Harvard students, commencement means the start of their professional careers, but for film fans, it means Reunion Weekend at the Brattle Theatre. It's an annual to-do that screens films celebrating their 25th, 50th and 75th anniversaries. This year's lineup includes classics like Spaceballs and Hellraiser, but the chance to see The Princess Bride on the big screen is most exciting of all. Fans already know it's "not just your basic, average, everyday, ordinary, run-of-the-mill, ho-hum fairy tale," and new viewers get the opportunity to see why May 24–25.

contradict each other and crucial shots remain stubbornly out of focus. This would be embarrassing work for a first-year film student. The fact that a director of Kasdan's stature signed off on such a project must signal his senility. This is a creaky picture in which nothing happens. (At Kendall Square.)

The Deep Blue Sea ★★★★ Lush and altogether devastating, director Terence Davies applies his lyrical post-WWII remembrances to Terence Rattigan's play about the inequities of desire. At first it seems an odd fit, with Davies' pregnant pauses colliding against Rattigan's astringent dialogue, but together they build a cumulative impact that just about flattened me. Rachel Weisz delivers a hypnotic performance as a bored housewife who finds herself enthralled by Tom Hiddleston's ill-tempered RAF pilot. Positioning a forgotten birthday as a fulcrum from which the movie drifts back and forth in time, The Deep Blue Sea burrows into the inconvenient truth that sometimes you just love someone more than that person is capable of loving you. Weisz doesn't get all actressy and shrill about it. Indeed, what makes the movie stick in your gut is her resignation from the beginning of this ill-fated affair—the look in her eyes suggesting she already knows exactly how this is all going to end. (In the suburbs.)

The Five-Year Engagement ★★ Jason Segel and Emily Blunt get engaged before the opening credits, so there's no suspense here. What we end up watching is a dirge in which their wedding is constantly delayed in order to serve the title. Cowriter Segel and director Nicholas Stoller have been here before with the wonderful Forgetting Sarah Marshall, but they're better at doing breakups than postponements. When Blunt gets a teaching job in Ann Arbor, Segel ditches his gig as a hotshot San Francisco sous chef to follow her into the long Michigan winter. Resentment and fake snow abound. There's an interesting movie to be made about spouses giving up their careers to follow the other person's dreams, but this film lacks the guts for such exploration. Instead, we get cheap laughs, a fake beard and a nasty, misogynist undertow. Both leads are charming, but there isn't enough of a movie here to support them. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

God Bless America ★★½ Writer/director Bobcat Goldthwait—the most fascinating and politically minded cast member to emerge from the Police Academy movies—follows up his triumphant 2009 film, World's Greatest Dad, with something slightly less. Bobcast's One Crazy Summer costar Joel Murray, whom you probably last saw wetting himself on Mad Men, appears here as Frank, a cubicle drone diagnosed with an inoperable brain tumor. In response, he goes on a mutlistate killing spree, cold-bloodedly murdering reality-show stars and Tea Party activists. Goldthwait mercilessly skewers the 24-hour news cycle and everything toxic in pop culture, and elicits a terrific performance by Tara Lynne Barr as the teenager supporting Frank's obsession. But the picture still feels cheap, mowing down easy targets absent of consequence. It's a liberal shooting gallery, and as much fun as his bile might be, Goldthwait isn't a tough enough filmmaker to ask any important questions. A fantasy for those of us who spend most of the time wanting to shoot our TVs, it's halfway to a great movie. (At the Brattle Theatre.)

The Hunger Games ★½ Seabiscuit director Gary Ross' careless version of Suzanne Collins' popular best-seller is my least favorite kind of adaptation—a timid affair so preoccupied with checking off plot points to please the established fanbase that it can't be bothered to engage the uninitiated. Jennifer Lawrence stars as a quick-witted teenage archer tossed into a horrific annual reality-TV tournament, during which poor children are forced to fight to the death for the amusement of the one percent. There's a nasty satirical point being made here, but I'll be damned if Ross knows what it is. Lacking the budget or scope for what's being attempted, this future dystopia is a lot of chintzy costumes, bad wigs and hambone character actors. Presumably attempting to obscure the limited production design and keep the violence to a PG-13 rating, Ross shoots The Hunger Games in jerky ellipses submerged in murky cinematography. Most of the time it's downright impossible to follow what's happening on-screen. I know you loved the book, but this is terrible filmmaking. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Jeff, Who Lives at Home ★ ½ The DIY pleasantness of directors Jay and Mark Duplass plays just fine on the indie -festival circuit, where slight narratives and a lack of ambition can coast on microbudgeted charm. But in a multiplex production with a cast stocked with stars, the brothers' slacker ethos just translates as lazy. Jason Segel stars as the titular 30-year-old stoner pondering questions of the universe in his mother's basement, while Ed Helms grates as his tacky brother who's worried that his wife (Judy Greer) might be cheating. In a completely disconnected thread, Susan Sarandon turns up as their cubicle-drone mother who's intrigued by the attentions of a secret admirer at the office. Not much at all happens in this picture, which subsists for 90 minutes on improvisation and some shoddy camerawork. The Duplass trademark is to constantly flick the zoom lens for no discernible reason, as if frantically signaling that they're not ready for prime time. (In the suburbs.)

Jiro Dreams of Sushi ★★★ Jiro's sushi restaurant has only 10 seats. If you can get reservations, which book a month in advance, expect to pay upward of $300 a meal for a dining experience that sometimes lasts a mere 15 minutes, while the proprietor gazes impatiently at you as he hands out slices of raw fish. And yet, Sukiyabashi Jiro has received three stars from the Michelin guide, and food critics such as Tokyo's Mashuhrio Yamamoto wax rhapsodic about Jiro Ono's sushi as if it were the second coming. David Gelb's strangely engrossing documentary is foodie-ism at its most monastic. Profiling prickly 85-year-old master chef Jiro Ono, it's mainly a film about the pursuit of perfection. The humorless and disciplined Ono keeps a samurai warrior's code in the kitchen, and it's fascinating to watch the precision of a master at work. Yet the movie flirts with sadness in the margins. As much as we admire the subject's skill and commitment to professionalism, is this really all there is to life? (At Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

Lockout ★★ ½ The credit "based on an original idea by Luc Besson" must be a joke, as this B-picture is a shameless rip-off of John Carpenter's Escape From New York, with the jail located in outer space instead of Manhattan. When the president's daughter (Maggie Grace) is held hostage by rioting inmates, it's up to Guy Pearce's badass to rescue her, even if he doesn't exactly want the job. There's also much ado about a stolen briefcase containing some sort of secret, but the story line gets fumbled around in this movie featuring two hours of plot stuffed into 95 minutes. Directors James Mather and Stephen St. Leger must have saved time by scrapping the establishing shots and scene transitions, as Lockout moves in such a hurry it's almost a blur. But Pearce is splendid, letting loose his inner Kurt Russell and responding to every situation with an inexhaustible supply of sarcasm. Fun junk, the movie is so silly that people can parachute to Earth from spaceships. (In the suburbs.)

Too True to be Good

Killer Performance

Jack Black stars in Bernie, director Richard Linklater's muddled take on a real-life murder in small-town Texas.

The Three Stooges ★ An act of artistic necrophilia on par with Gus Van Sant's Psycho remake, brothers Peter and Bobby Farrelly's years-in-development "tribute" casts Sean Hayes, Chris Diamantopoulos and Will Sasso as passable imitations of Moe, Larry and Curly. Transplanted to modern times for no discernible reason, the lazy story line finds the stooges searching for $830,000 to save their endangered orphanage, allowing the Farrellys to ramp up the treacle while eliciting a rare, unfunny turn from Larry David as a nun named Sister Mary Mengele. Somewhere in the mix is Sofia Vergara as an adulterous wife plotting to have her husband whacked, with our trio of geniuses inadvertently confounding her plans at every turn. All the nyuk-nyuk's, eye-pokes and bonks on the head are faithfully rendered, albeit staged by the Farrellys with complete indifference to anything resembling comic timing or slapstick precision. Stick with the elegant idiocy of the original stooges, who never would've stooped to jokes about the Kardashians and Jersey Shore. (In the suburbs.)

21 Jump Street ★★★ ½ It won't win any awards, but 21 Jump Street is terrific where you least expect it. Fast, funny and smarter than its demeanor initially lets on, the film stars Channing Tatum and Jonah Hill as an inspired pairing of mismatched dummy cops. The absurdly handsome Tatum has the soul of a clown, and Hill remains a doughy ball of need. What's most enjoyable about the duo's unexpected chemistry is that they seem to genuinely like each other, and often shout it from the rooftops. Theirs is the most effusive bromance we've seen in this unfortunately named genre. Our heroes are tasked with infiltrating a designer drug ring that operates out of a wealthy, suburban high school, and when it gets really interesting, 21 Jump Street becomes more like a dude-comedy remake of Francis Ford Coppola's Peggy Sue Got Married, wondering what you'd do differently, if given a second crack at your teenage years. (In the suburbs.)

Erase All Doubt

Penciled In With their sweet yet psychedelic melodies, the women of Grass Widow are not your average female rockers. Delightfully dark lyrics juxtaposed with honey-soaked vocals and harmonies have taken this San Francisco–based trio to the top of the indie charts. They've also got a taste for cultural commentary. Take, for instance, "Disappearing Industries," a track about a deceptive, Oz-like land that's a parallel for the music business. Check out these post-punk princesses in person on May 30 when they play at Great Scott.

Feeling Scrappy

Sew It Goes Carol Greenwood's art is equal parts imagination and legacy. Pieces in her latest exhibition, The Last Cabinet, are made from materials salvaged from her family's now-defunct fabric business. Reworking seam binding, bias tape, fabric and thread, Greenwood creates free-hanging sculptures that confront issues like closure, perception and flux. See her textile tributes to family history at the Bromfield Gallery through May 26.
